ERLANGER.

Graves addition to Erlanger is a nice little suburb. You can get anything you desire done in Erlanger, even to the coloring of your eyes. A new bathing has been launched here, beginning with the new year. It has a capital of $25,000, and some of the best business men of the town are interested in the enterprise. Indications are that 1912 will be a record breaker in Erlanger's growth. New residences will go up in all directions, and extensive street and sidewalk improvements will be accomplished. It is rumored that our friend to the south (Elmore), is contemplating the annexation of Florence, in which event the county line will be so changed as to include the older municipality in Kenton county.

H. G. Buckner's new residence will be ready to occupy in the next few months. It will be decidedly the most modern building in the town. Having a most delightful location it will be an ornament to our thriving little city. This town has become a great country center, and hundreds of our country cousins, who, in years ago, hauled their coal from Covington, secure their supply here, and, as a result, four local dealers in the black diamond are flourishing.

Traction road meetings here are about due again, after which committees will be hiked down the hills in search of Mr. Ernst, hoping to be able to demonstrate to his satisfaction that he is neglecting a prolific revenue field by not extending his road to Erlanger.

When the work is completed that is under way on Erlanger road, Erlanger will have two as handsome avenues as any country town in the State. The construction of these two avenues was an immense undertaking and the towns the size of Erlanger have the nerve to tackle a like extensive improvement.

In the last two years several bustling business men have located here, and, as a result, the pioneer business individuals have been compelled to get a move on, and all together the volume of business in the town has increased to such an extent that time is surprisingly large when the proximity to the large cities is considered. In fact, it is not a rare thing for people from here to visit Cincinnati where they learn that they can buy desired articles cheaper at home. This business men here should call a meeting and organize a boosters' club. There is nothing like it.

The town was startled last Friday afternoon by the accidental shooting of E. H. Riggs, proprietor of the local tin shop and a store. Mr. Riggs was in his barn, and Harry Slater and some other young men were near by shooting at a target, when a ball from the gun fired by Harry Slater passed through a plank siding on the barn and struck Mr. Riggs just below the right eye, ranging downward and lodging so near the jugular vein that the surgeons thought it not safe to attempt to remove it. Mr. Riggs is getting along very nicely and will soon recover. Mr. Slater was almost prostrated by the accident, he and Mr. Riggs being close friends.

BURNING DAYLIGHT
By JACK LONDON
Author of "The Call of the Wild,"
"White Fang," "Martin Eden," etc.
Illustrations by Dearborn Melvill

"There isn't anybody else. I don't know anybody I like well enough to marry. For that matter, I don't think I am a marrying woman. Office work seems to spoil me for that."

"It strikes me that you're the most marryingest woman that ever made a man sit up and take notice. And now another question. You see, I've just got to locate the lay of the land. Is there anybody you like as much as you like me?"

But Dede had herself well in hand. "That's unfair," she said. "And if you stop and consider, you will find that you are doing the very thing you disclaimed—namely, nagging. I refuse to answer any more of your questions. Let us talk about other things. How is Boh?"

Half an hour later, whirling along through the rain on Telegraph Avenue toward Oakland, Daylight smoked one of his brown-paper cigarettes and reviewed what had taken place. It was not at all bad, was his summing up, though there was much about it that was baffling. There was that liking him the more she knew him and at the same time wanting to marry him less. That was a puzzle.

Once again, on a rainy Sunday, weeks afterward, Daylight proposed to Dede. As on the first time, he restrained himself until his hunger for her overcame him and swept him away in his red automobile to Berkeley. He left the machine several blocks away and proceeded to the house on foot. But Dede was out, the landlady's daughter told him, and added, on second thought, that she was walking in the hills. Furthermore, the young lady directed him where Dede's walk was most likely to extend. Daylight obeyed the girl's instructions, and soon the street he followed passed the last house and itself ceased where began the first steep slopes of the open hills. The air blew damp with the on-coming of rain, for the rising wind proclaimed its impudence. As far as he could see, there was no sign of Dede on the smooth, grassy hills. To the right, dipping down into a hollow and rising again, was a large, full-grown oak, and on its grove. Here all was noise and movement, the lofty, slender-trunked trees swaying back and forth in the wind and clashing their branches together. In the squalls, above all the minor noises of creaking and groaning, arose a deep humming thrum of a mighty harp. Knowing Dede as he did, Daylight was confident that he would find her somewhere in this grove where the storm effects were so pronounced. And find her he did, across the hollow and on the exposed crest of the opposite slope where the gale smote its heretofore.

"It's the same old thing," he said. "I want you and I've come for you. You've just got to have me, Dede, for the more I think about it the more certain I am that you've got a sneaking liking for me that's something more than just ordinary liking. And you don't say that it isn't; now, don't you?"

"Please, please," she begged. "We can never marry, so don't let us discuss it."

Daylight decided that action was more efficient than speech. So he stepped between her and the wind and drew her so that she stood close in the shelter of him. An unusually stiff squall blew about them and thrummed overhead in the tree-tops, and both paused to listen. A shower of flying leaves enveloped them, and hard on the heel of the wind came driving drops of rain. He looked down on her and on her hair, wind-blown about her face; and because of her closeness to him and of a fresher and more poignant realization of what she meant to him, he trembled so that she was aware of it in the hand that held hers. She suddenly leaped away from him, bowing her head until it rested lightly upon his breast. And so they stood while another squall, with flying leaves and scattered drops of rain, rattled past. With equal suddenness she lifted her head and looked at him.

"Do you know," she said, "I prayed last night about you. I prayed that you would fall, that you would lose everything—everything."

Daylight stared his amazement at this cryptic utterance.

"That sure beats me. I always said I got out of my depth with women, and you've got me out of my depth now. Well, you've just got to explain that, that's all."

His arms went around her and held her closely, and this time she did not resist. Her head was bowed, and he could not see her face, yet he had a premonition that she was crying. He had learned the virtue of silence, and he waited her will in the matter. Things had come to such a pass that she was bound to tell him something now. Of that he was confident.

"I would dearly like to marry you," she faltered, "but I am afraid. I am proud and humble at the same time, and I want a man like you should care for me. But you have too much money. There's where my abominable common sense steps in. Even if I did marry you, I could never be my man—your man, your money's man, I know

I am a foolish woman, but I want my man for myself. And your money destroys you; it makes you less and less nice. I am not ashamed to say that I love you, because I shall never marry you and I love you much more than I did know you at all, when you first came down from Alaska and I first went into the office. You were my hero. You were the Burning Daylight of the gold-diggings, the daring traveler and miner. And you looked it. I don't think any woman could have looked at you without loving you—then. But you don't look it now. You, a man of the open, have been cooping yourself up in the cities with all that that means. You are becoming something different, something not so healthy, not so stronger. Your money and your way of life are doing it. You know it. You haven't the same body now that you had then. You are putting on flesh, and it is not healthy flesh. You are kind and gentle with me, I know, but you are not kind and gentle to all the world as you were then. You have become harsh and cruel. I do love you, but I cannot marry you and destroy love. You are growing into a thing that I must in the end despise. You can't help it. More and more you are becoming a thing that I must despise. This business—and it's all perfectly useless, so far as you are concerned—claims all of you. I sometimes think it would be easier to share you equitably with another woman than to share you with this business. I might have half of you, at any rate. This business would claim, not half of you, but nine-tenths of you, or ninety-nine hundredths. You hold back nothing; you put all you've got into whatever you are doing—

"Limit is the sky," he grunted grim affirmation.

"But you would only play the lover-husband that way. And now I won't say another word," she added. "I've delivered a whole sermon."

She rested now, frankly and fairly, in the shelter of his arms, and both were oblivious to the gale that rushed past them in quicker and stronger gusts. The downpour of rain had not yet come, but the mist-like squalls were more frequent. Daylight was openly perplexed, and he was still perplexed when he began to speak.

"You've left me no argument. I know I'm not the same man that came from Alaska. I don't like the trail any more as I did in them days. I'm soft in my muscles, and my mind's gone hard. I used to respect men. I despise them now. You see, I spent all my life in the open, and I reckon I'm an open-air man. Why, I've got the prettiest little ranch you ever laid eyes on up in Glen Ellen. That's where I got stuck for the brick-yard. You recollect handling the correspondence. I only laid eyes on the ranch that one time, and I so fell in love with it that I bought it, there and then. I just rode around the hills, and was happy as a kid out of school. I'd be a better man living in the country. The city doesn't make me better. You're plumb right, I know it. But suppose your prayer should be answered and I'd go clean broke and have to work for day's wages? Suppose I had nothing left but that little ranch, and was satisfied to grow a few chickens and scratch a living somehow—would you marry me then, Dede?"

"Why, we'd be together all the time," she cried.

Then was the moment, among the trees, ere they began the descent of the hill, that Daylight might have drawn her closely to him and kissed her once. But he was too perplexed with the new thoughts she had put into his head to take advantage of the situation. He merely caught her by the arm and helped her over the rougher footing. At the edge of the grove he suggested that it might be better for them to part there, but she would not let him go. He accompanied her as far as the house.

"Do you know," he said, "taking it by and large, it's the happiest day of my life. Dede, Dede, we've just got to get married. It's the only way, and trust to luck for it's coming out all right."

But the tears were threatening to rise in her eyes again, as she shook her head and turned and went up the steps.

CHAPTER XVIII.

When the ferry system began to run, and the steamers Oakland and San Francisco was demonstrated to be cut in half, the tide of Daylight's terrific expenditure started to turn. Not that it really did turn, for he promptly went into further investments. Thousands of lots in his residence tract of the Point, and thousands of homes was being built. Factories were also being sold, and business properties in the heart of Oakland. All this tended to a steady appreciation in the value of Daylight's huge holdings. But, as of old, he had his hunch and was riding it. Already he had begun borrowing money, but he did it with knowledge that it was a stable enterprise rather than a risky placer-mining boom.

Work on Daylight's dock system went on apace; yet it was one of those enterprises that consumed time and energy and that could not be accomplished in the quickest of time. Not content with manufacturing electricity for his street railways in the old-fashioned way, in power-houses, Daylight organized the Sierra and Salvador Power Company. This immediately assumed large proportions. Crossing the San Joaquin Valley on the way from the mountains, and plunging through the Contra Costa hills, there were many towns, and even a robust city, that could be supplied with power, also with light; and it became a street-and-house-lighting project as well. As soon as the purchase of power sites in the Sierras was rushed through, the survey parties were out and building operations began. And so it went. There were a thousand maws into which he poured unceasing streams of money.

In the spring of the year the Great Panic came on. The first warning was when the banks began calling in their unprotected loans. Daylight promptly paid the first of several of his personal notes that were presented.

His Arms Went About Her and Held Her Closely.

ed; then he divined that these demands but indicated the way the wind was going to blow, and that one of those terrific financial storms he had heard about was soon to sweep over the United States. How terrific this particular storm was to be he did not anticipate. Nevertheless, he took every precaution in his power and had no anxiety about his weather.

And in the end, when early summer came on, everything began to mend. Came a day when Daylight did the unprecedented. He left the office an hour earlier than usual, and for the reason that for the first time since the panic there was not an item of work waiting to be done. He dropped into Hegan's private office, before leaving, for a chat, and as he stood up to go, he said:

"Hegan, we're all hunkadory. We're pulling out of the financial pawshop by the shape, and we'll get out with out leaving one unredeemed pledge behind. The worst is over, and the end is in sight. Just tight rein for a couple more weeks, just a bit of a pinch or a flurry or so now and then, and we can let go and spit on our hands."

For once he varied his programme. Instead of going directly to his hotel, he started on a round of the bars and cafes, drinking a cocktail here and a cocktail there, and two or three when he encountered men he knew. It was after an hour or so of this that he dropped into the bar of the Parthenon, where he had always passed on his way home. By this time all his being was pleasantly warmed by the alcohol, and he was in the most genial and best of spirits. At the corner of the bar several young men were up to the old trick of resting their elbows and attempting to force each other's hands down. One broad-shouldered young giant never removed his elbow, but put down every hand that came against him. Daylight was interested.

"It's Slosson," the barkeeper told him, in answer to his query. "He's the heavy-hammer thrower at the U.

"We're Pulling Out of the Financial Pawshop in Fine Shape."

C. Broke all records this year, and the world's record on top of it. He's a husky all right all right."

Daylight nodded and went over to him, placing his own arm in opposition.

"I'd like to go you a futter, son, on that proposition," he said.

The young man laughed and looked hands with him; and to Daylight's astonishment it was his own hand that was forced down on the bar.

"Hold on," he muttered. "Just one more futter. I reckon I wasn't just ready that time."

Again the hands locked. It happened quickly. The offensive attack of Daylight's muscles slipped instantly into defence, and, resisting vainly, his hand was forced over and down. Daylight was dazed. It had been no trick. The skill was equal, or, if anything, the superior skill had been his. Strength, sheer strength, had done it. He stared for the drinks, and, still dazed and pondering, held up his own arm and looked at it as at some new strange thing. He did not know this arm. It certainly was not the arm he had carried around with him all the years. The old arm? Why, it would have been many feet turned down that young husky's. But this arm—he continued to look at it with such dubious perplexity as to bring a roar of laughter from the young men.

This laughter aroused him. He joined in it at first, and then his face grew grave. He leaned toward the hammer-thrower.

"Son," he said, "let me whisper a secret. Get out of here and quit drinking before you begin."

The young fellow flushed angrily, but Daylight held steadily on.

"You listen to your dad, and let him say a few. I'm a young man myself, only I ain't. Let me tell you, several years ago for me to turn your hand down would have been like committing assault and battery on a kindergarten."

Slosson looked his incredulity, while the others grinned and clustered around Daylight encouragingly.

"Son, I ain't given to preaching. This is the first time I ever come to the penitent form, and you put me there yourself—hard. I've seen a few in my time, and I ain't fastidious so as you can notice it. But let me tell you right now that I'm worth the devil alone knows how many millions, and that I'd sure give it all, right here on the bar, to turn down your hand. Which means I'd give the whole shooting match just to be back where I was before I quit sleeping under the stars and come into the hen-coops of cities to drink cocktails and lift up my feet and ride. Son, that's what's the matter with me, and that's the way I feel about it. The game ain't worth the candle. You just take care of it, and roll my advice over once in a while. Good night."

He turned and lurched out of the place, the moral effect of his utterance largely spoiled by the fact that he was so potently full while he uttered it.

But in a daze, Daylight made to his hotel, accomplished his dinner, and prepared for bed.

"The damned young whippersnapper!" he muttered. "Put my hand down easy as you please. My hand!"

He held up the offending member and stared at it, and it struck him. But this was not the time. In the morning, after a good sleep, he would give it consideration.

CHAPTER XIX.

Daylight awoke with the familiar parched mouth and lips and throat, took a long drink of water from the pitcher beside his bed, and gathered up the train of thought where he had left it the night before. He reviewed the easement of the financial strain. Things were mending at that. While the going was good, the greatest dangers were already past.

His mind moved on to the incident at the corner of the bar of the Parthenon, when the young athlete had turned his head down. He was no longer stunned by the event, but he was shocked and grieved, as only a strong man can be, at this passing of his strength. He had always looked upon this strength of his as permanent, and here, for years, it had been steadily ebbing from him. As he had diagnosed it, he had come in from under the stars to roost in the coops of cities. He had almost forgotten how to walk. He had lifted up his feet and been ridden around in automobiles, cabs and carriages, and electric cars. He had not exercised, and he had dried-dropt his muscles with alcohol. And was it worth it? What did all his money mean after all? Dede was right. It could buy him no more than a few more years. And at the same time it had made him the subject of slaves. It tied him fast. Which was better? he asked himself. All this was Dede's own thought. It was what she had meant when she prayed he would go broke. He held up the offending right arm and it wasn't the same old arm. Of course she could not love that arm and that body as she had loved the strong, clean arm and body of years before. He didn't like that arm and body himself. A young whippersnapper had been able to take liberties with it. It had gone back to him. He had gone up suddenly. No, he had gone back on it! He had gone back on himself. He had gone back on Dede. She was right, a thousand times right, and she had sense enough to know it, sense enough to refuse to marry a money-slave with a winking eye.

He got out of bed and looked at himself in the long mirror on the wardrobe door. He wasn't pretty. The old-time lean cheeks were gone. These were heavy, seeming to hang down by their own weight. He looked for the adlines of cruelty Dede had spoken of, and he found them in the eyes as well, the eyes that were muddy now after all the cocktails of the night before, and of the months and years before. He looked at the clearly defined jaw that showed under the hair, and they found them. He rolled up the sleeve of his pajamas. No wonder the hammer-thrower had put his hand down. These weren't muscles. A rising tide of fat had submerged them. Arms stripped of the palms and feet. Arms

He was shocked, this time by the bulk of his body. It wasn't pretty. The lean stomach had become a paunch. The rigid muscles of chest and shoulders and abdomen had broken down into rolls of flesh. And this was age. Then there drifted across the field of vision of his mind's eye the old man he had encountered at Glen Ellen, coming up the hillside through the fires of sunset, white-headed, and white-haired, and leaning on a stick, the pall of foaming milk in his face all the warm glow and content of the passing summer day. That had been a "Yes sree, eighty-four, and spryler than most," he could hear the old man say.

Next he remembered Ferguson, the little man who had settled into the road like a rabbit, the one-time managing editor of a great newspaper, who was content to live in the chaparral along with his spring of mountain water and his hand-reared and manured fruit trees. Ferguson had solved a problem. He had run away from the doctors and the chicken-coop of a city, and soaked up health like a thirsty sponge. He sat down suddenly on the bed, startled by the greatness of the idea that had come to him. He did not sit long. His mind, working in its customary way, like a steel trap, caught the idea in all its bearings. It was big—bigger than anything he had faced before. And he faced it squarely, picked it up in his two hands and turned it over and around and looked at it. The simplicity of it delighted him. He chuckled over it, reached for his dressing gown, and in the middle of the dressing he stopped in order to use the telephone.

Dede was the first he called up.

"Don't come to the office this morning," he said. "I'm coming out to see you for a moment."

He called up others. He ordered his motor-car. To Jones he gave instructions for the forwarding of Bob and Wolf to Glen Ellen. Hegan he surprised by asking him to look up the deed of the Glen Ellen ranch and make out a new one in Dede Mason's name.

"Who?" Hegan demanded.

"Dede Mason," Daylight replied impatiently. "The 'phone must be in distinct this morning. Dede Mason. Got it?"

Half an hour later he was flying out to Berkeley. And for the first time the big red car halted directly before the house. Dede offered to receive him in the parlor, but he shook his head and nodded toward her room.

FARM AND ROAD IMPROVEMENT

IMPROVED ROADS IN AMERICA

Some States are doing more in road improvement than others in the United States.

There are in the United States a little more than two million one hundred and fifty thousand miles of roads. Of this mileage only one hundred and seventy-six thousand, four hundred and twenty-nine miles are improved, or eight and two-tenths per cent of the total, according to statistics gathered by the government office of public roads. The improved roads are those surfaced with gravel, stone, or with some special material.

The most striking feature of these statistics is the enormous extent of unimproved roads in the United States. An expenditure of something like $10,000,000 would be required to convert the common earth roads of the country into even good gravel roads. That this is desirable few will gainsay, and that it is becoming necessary under modern conditions and the relations now existing between producer and consumer is also quite generally admitted. The increased cost of hauling over unimproved roads is an immense tax upon the farmer and those who purchase his products, and is a restriction on the crops which can be raised and moved in certain localities.

The Interstate Commerce commission finds that two hundred and sixty five million tons of agricultural, forest and miscellaneous products of the land are hauled to depots for shipment in the course of a year. Figured on a basis of the average haul at the lowest average rate over unimproved roads, 23 cents per ton per mile, the cost would be four hundred and thirty-two millions, four hundred thousand dollars. If the hauling could be reduced to one-half the present average or 11 1/2¢ a ton, the resultant saving would exceed $200,000,000 a year.

That such a saving is reasonable is indicated by the experiences in other countries and in localities where improved roads are found. The cost of hauling on such improved roads is placed at from 8 to 10 cents per ton. The introduction of wise and equitable road laws and good business management would, it is estimated, save forty million dollars more in the administration of the country's roads or leave it for some other use.

ARTICHOKE FOR THE TABLE

Vegetable Can Be Grown in Almost Any Garden and Makes Most Delicious Change in the Dishes.

The artichoke, which can be grown in almost any garden, makes a delicious change in the vegetable dishes for the table. The plant is perennial, but declines rapidly, and should be reset every three years.

It is propagated from seed, and the suckers are set out, producing edible heads the second year. The heads are from three to four inches in diameter, and are ready to cut for the table just before they open.

For pickling, the heads are often taken when about half grown. The leaves are sometimes blanched and eaten, and these form the salad plants which are seen on the market.

TO KILL ROADSIDE INSECTS

Right Time to Do Work is Late in Fall When Cold Weather Has Set in and Vegetation Dry.

(By GEORGE H. GLITZKE.)

A great many people have the mistaken idea that the time to burn the roadside in order to kill the many insects that winter in these places, is in the early spring of the year.

If you will watch closely at such a place where the roadside has been burned in the spring you will see the insects coming out of the ground very thickly on the warm days.

This proves that the insects were killed. Most of them are in the ground and the heat of the fire passing over them does not harm them and the trash burned from above them makes it all the easier for the insects to come forth.

While no doubt a few of them are killed the majority of them are uninjured.

The right time to burn these roadsides to do effective work is in the late fall of the year, after the cold weather has already set in and all the vegetation is dry.

Then, if the roadsides are burned, the insects in such places will be killed by heavy freezing, as they usually do not go very deeply into the ground but seem to depend on the covering of trash to protect them from the cold. This is a great bit more effective in the killing of the insects than the spring burning.

Not only does the fall burning of the roadsides do good by the killing of the insects that winter there, but it also helps to keep the road in better shape by allowing less snow to collect in the drifts as it usually does in places where there is much grass and weeds.

STICK TO THE FANNING MILL

By Grading Our Own Seed We Can Materially Increase Yield of Our Small Grain Crops.

No farmer can get any one to take the same pains in grading his seed that he would himself. Some farmers claim that it does not pay to clean grain.

It is a fact that it does not pay very large returns to clean and grade grain before selling it, but by grading our own seed we can materially increase the yield of our small grain crops.

The corn crop of this country has been increased millions of bushels by Fanning Mill.

Intelligent seed selection. All other grain crops can be improved by grading the seed, so that only good, plump, healthy grains, free from all foul weed-seeds may be grown.

The fanning mill, judiciously used, will do much to increase the yield of every small grain-crop and assist in keeping our fields free from noxious weeds.

It will take cockle out of wheat, buckthorn, plantain out of clover, in fact it can be adjusted so as to handle all kinds of grain and weed-seeds.

If you decide that it pays to sow good seed and to keep your fields free from noxious weeds, then do not hesitate to invest a few dollars in a fanning mill.

GOOD ROADS & FARM NOTES

File the crosscut saw yourself; you will thus soon save enough to buy a new saw.

Weeds crowd the cultivated plants, depriving them of light and space in both soil and air.

Clover and grass seed will nearly always do best when they can be started to early growth.

The germinating power of the mid-tide kernels of an ear of corn is much stronger than that of the tip and butt kernels.

Experts of the department of agriculture advocate the use of lime in a limited and experimental way in every locality.

No matter whether the corn is bought or saved from your own farm it should be stored in a dry, well-ventilated place.

After growing a crop of corn, the soil is always in excellent form to absorb and retain the autumn rains and winter snows.

Alfalfa does not attain maturity until the third or fourth year; therefore, do not sow it expecting to get the best results in less time.

Corn treated with a dressing of plaster and ashes will soon show by the strong growth and the dark color of the leaf the effect of the dressing.

Keep wide paths shoveled to every outbuilding. Help to open the roads when heavy snows drift them, whether you are called out by the path-makers or not.

Don't put off till spring any outside work that can be done now. Clean up the garden, haul out manure, and when possible push the plowing before snow flies.

Take the frost out of your grindstone before you grind the ax, but do it gradually, and not by using too hot water. That would injure the quality of the stone.

DAIRY

AID IN RAISING DAIRY CALF

Young Animals Are Shot Up in Small Stanchions and Prevented Sucking of Udders and Ears.

Small stanchions are a great help in raising dairy calves. The calves are shut in these, as shown in the picture, before feeding, which allows each one to get the proper amount of food and prevents sucking each other's ears and udders, which often works considerable injury.

Where a bunch of calves are raised together the larger and stronger ones will get more than their share of milk, and the smaller ones, which really need it, will not get sufficient. After the calves are fed their milk in little dry grain and a wisp of alfalfa or clover hay or some green food. The stanchion can be made in sections and set up anywhere in the barn or taken to the field.

Wooden stanchions are easily and cheaply constructed, for they can be made largely of waste lumber, says the Farm and Home.

The lumber required for ten stanchions of this kind is as follows:

Two pieces 1x12 inches by 16 feet for bottom of feed box.
Two pieces 1x12 inches by 16 feet for upright partitions.
Two pieces 1x6 inches by 10 feet for front of feed box.

Five pieces 1x6 inches by 16 feet for top and bottom rails.
Five pieces 1x4 inches by 14 feet full thickness for fixed uprights.
Two pieces 4x12 inches, 3/4 inches thick, for swinging uprights.

Ten pieces 1x3x10 inches for tongues or locks.
Three posts 6 feet long.
Three blocks 6x12 inches under feed box.

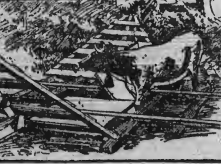

This allows 2 feet of space at each calf, which can, if desired, be reduced to 1 1/2 feet, and the lumber reduced accordingly.

Three blocks 6x12 inches under feed box.

CATTLE GUARD QUITE NOVEL

Device Which Effectually Prevents Cows From Straying Up Line of Railway, Thus Meeting Injury.

Our illustration depicts a novel device which effectually prevents cattle straying up the line of a railway and thus meeting with injury or death from oncoming traffic. As the cow walks along the line she meets the platform shown, which turns up as she steps upon it, and effectually bars her wanderings. The idea is quite simple, but none the less effectual, and has saved the lives of many cattle.

A Profitable Business.

A farmer in New Jersey makes a good deal of money by buying up fairly good cows and selling them at auction. His sales are held just before they become fresh, or when they are springing udders, as a cow looks at her best at that time.

For a month or two previous to the sale he feeds liberally, brushes the coats of the animals vigorously twice a day and when the sale day arrives their horns are polished, their tails combed and they present a 50 per cent. better appearance than cows of better blood which have had only ordinary care.

In this way this Jerseyman gets from $15 to $20 per cow more than anybody else in that county.

Great Differences in Milk.

Every person who has ever milked cows, as well as some who have only witnessed this interesting process at a very safe distance, realize that there is much variation in the quantity of milk from certain cows in the same herd and on the same feed, but to most people "milk is milk," very few having any correct idea as to what is commonly called the "richness" of it.

Increase Milk Flow.

When cows have been milking for several months it is generally a waste of feed to attempt to increase their flows of milk. About the best that can be done with an animal after she has established her milk flow is to continue a system of feeding that will keep her from shrinking in milk production abnormally fast.

KEEPING BARN YARDS CLEAN

Dairyman Cannot Expect to Produce Good Milk When Cows Wade Through Mud and Filth.

(By B. J. LYON.)

It has always been a source of great wonder to me how any dairyman can expect to produce good milk when his cows are compelled to wade through mud and filth in the barn yard.

Even if the barn filth is scrupulously clean—which it cannot be if the yards are muddy—the odor arising from the filthy barn will offset all the efforts made to keep the milk clean when it comes from the cows.

There is no one solution to fit all barn yards. Each must be treated by itself and to meet the conditions existing in it. If the yard is situated on a gentle slope, all that will be needed is to grade the yard, place a few tiles, and keep the barn yard perfectly dry, but if there is only an occasional low place in the yard the tiling need not be placed so close together.

In some yards a great deal of broken rock, gravel or coal clinders are necessary to keep the ground in good condition. If the ground is a black heavy soil it may be kept reasonably dry by covering it with these materials. The first thing to be done is to remove the top soil to a depth of at least six inches, then cover the ground with the broken rock or clinders. This may be in pieces of from two to five inches in diameter. Large pebbles are excellent for this purpose as they allow the water to drain perfectly from the surface.

The layer of large rocks or stone should be placed in his cows with a heavy tamping iron or rolled with a field roller.

The second layer should be a little smaller and the third very fine crushed stone. The last layer may be mixed with clinders which make a hard surface but which make a hard can of after a time easily be scraped with an iron or wooden hoe.

KNOT THAT WILL NOT SLIP

Illustration Shows Method That Will Prove Effectual and Needs No Further Description.

The accompanying illustration shows a method of tying a knot which will not slip, in the end of a rope when a long loop is desired. The process is clearly indicated and needs no description.

For Milk Production.

The milk who tries to get a good flow of milk out of his cows by feeding them corn stover, oat straw and corn, with perhaps a little bran, is attempting to perform the impossible—to make something out of nothing. Feeds that contain milk producing compounds must be supplied, and if clover or alfalfa or cowpea hay is not to be had, bran, oil meal and cotton-seed meal must be bought and fed in considerable quantities.

Cows With Appetites.

The cow with the biggest appetite, other things being equal, is the one which will give the most milk and butter fat. There is something about the cow with large belly, big mouth, deep chest and distended nostrils that takes the eye of the experienced dairyman. He knows that she has the ability to eat large quantities of food.

DAIRY NOTES

Have the same person milk the same cows as far as possible.

The best plan should be to carefully care for as any other utensil in the dairy.

It is a mistake to breed the heifer so that she freshens too young. Give her a chance to develop first.

The creamery is becoming so popular all through the country that so-called dairy butter is on the wane.

Through the use of silos and silage crops from two to five times as many cows can be kept on the same land.

The abused cow is always the ugly cow. Likewise the ugly cow has nearly always been made that way by abuse.

The cow must have pasture or its equivalent. This accounts for the many soils and the great popularity of silage crops.

The separator needs ventilating. The best plan is to leave it uncovered or better still, leave the parts unassembled after washing.

Much is said about scales on the farm, but the most important scale is the one that hangs up behind the cows and is used after every milking.

The light, unutilized barn may be a little warmer than one that is properly taken care of, but it is also a whole lot more damp and dangerous to the health of the cows.

Some cows are such persistent milkers that it is almost impossible to dry them up before calving. This should be done, however, for every good cow needs a little rest.

Farm No. 1 contains about thirty acres and has a good house, a barn, crib, orchard, etc., on it. Price—thirty-five dollars per acre.

Farm No. 2 contains about seventy-five acres, and has a good five-room house on it, and good outbuildings, and is offered at forty-five dollars per acre.

Farm No. 3 contains about one hundred and fifteen acres, and is improved with house, stable, crib, etc., and a large tobacco barn 90 ft. by 40 ft. by 20 ft. to the eaves which cost about fifteen hundred dollars. This fine farm is offered for fifty-five dollars an acre.

Farm No. 4 will not be sold until farm No. 3 is disposed of.

"I Am Well"

writes Mrs. L. R. Barker, of Bud, Ky., "and can do all my housework. For years I suffered with such pains, I could scarcely stand on my feet. After three different doctors had failed to help me, I gave Cardui a trial. Now, I feel like a new woman."

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

A woman's health depends so much upon her delicate organs, that the little trouble there affects her whole system. It is the little things that count in a woman's life and health. If you suffer from any of the aches and pains, due to womanly weakness, take Cardui at once, and avoid more serious troubles. We urge you to try it. Begin today.

room Keeper.

The Speakership contest in the Democratic caucus was an interesting event which it took five heats to decide. Claud Terrill, of Trimble county, winning out with votes to spare.

Terrill's election to the Speakership indicates that a considerable majority of the members of the House will stand by Gov. McCreary and support the measures advocated by the Governor, and that the Prison Commission, which has concluded the State of Kentucky belong to it politically, will have to walk the plank, as the Governor wants the law establishing the board repealed.

In renewing her father's subscription to the Recorder, Mrs.
Fannie Griffith, of Los Angeles, Calif., writes glowingly of the climate, but says she would like to again see her mother. She says her mother is in very poor health while her father, T. W. Finch, has changed very little since he left Kentucky.

The Recorder is authorized to announce Hon. Arthur B. House as a candidate for nomination and reelection to Congress from this district subject to the action of the Democratic Congressional Primary election called for February 3, 1912.

Last Monday was the eighth consecutive New Year's day on which John L. Jones appeared at the Recorder's office and plunked down the money for his and James Taylor's subscriptions. They are subscribers of a quarter of a century if not more, and then there was F. A. Utz, who came across the ice time for his year's subscription. Fred is a battle-scarred veteran in the Recorder's ranks.

The Recorder desires to call the attention of its correspondents to the fact that persons who expect to take advantage of the free ads. in its columns must be subscribers. Every week it is necessary to use the blue pencil on such ads, which, when charged for, cost one cent a word. It is a pleasure for the Recorder to accommodate a subscriber with one insertion of a small advertisement, but it does not consider it under any obligations whatever to thus accommodate those who are doing nothing to assist it. It is an advocate of reciprocity.

R. J. Stephens, of Woodland, Mo., thinks he has solved the farm labor problem. Last April Mr. Stephens came to Kansas City and bought a car load of Angora goats. He turned them into a large brush field and let them go. A few days ago Mr. Stephens brought back the goats and sold them for more than they cost after they cleared up all the brush and weeds on his farm. "It is simply wonderful what those little animals can do," Mr. Stephens said. They ate it down to the very ground all sorts of brush and cleared up all the thickets about the farm. They would not eat a blade of grass as long as there was a brush to work on. They ate the bark off of all the small trees and killed several saplings that I did not care to have destroyed. This fall finds my fields in fine shape and now I have bought two car loads of breeding ewes which I will keep instead of the goats, as on the ground that the goats cleared they will do very well next spring in raising their lambs.—Kansas City Drover's Telegram.

RUBBER-TIRED CASH SEPARATOR

Original and Witty Description of What the Automobile Really Is and Means to the Owner.

BY GEORGE FITCH.

The automobile is a rubber-tired separator which is being used largely to keep prosperous American citizens from worrying over how to invest their money.

There are a great many varieties of cash separators, but the automobile is by far the best.

It can go through an ordinary flush citizen in a very few months and leave very little cash in the tailings.

In fact, its work is approached in thoroughness only by the private yacht, the society bug and the private school for girls. The automobile is driven by gasoline, assisted by water, oil, electricity, wind and gas, and sometimes horses and mules.

Some drivers have also used brains with great success, but the supply is too limited to be generally adopted.

If every automobile driver were equipped with a small set of brains, we would have no more accidents which occur while a car is being driven about fifteen miles an hour, the speed limit.

An auto consists of an engine with 175 parts, connected by a clutch with ninety-five parts to a gear box with seventy-five parts and then to a differential with fifty parts. When all these parts are feeling well and are working together, like the Old Guard Republicans in New York, the automobile is said to be in good running order.

However, if any individual part of an automobile is feeling convalescent and will not work at all, the man who wants to sell the machine to you second hand will solemnly swear that the machine will run like a watch.

Automobiles come in all sizes, including the piker size, the family size, the bank director size and the full size.

A small car with only twelve condensed horses in it can be bought for $350 and can be driven over the curb and into a tree as successfully as a big car which costs $5,000 and has tires as fast as elephant's legs.

Automobiles are now very carefully made and are entirely practicable, being used for hauling trunks, transporting passengers and getting rid of the idle rich.

Automobiles are made which can run one hundred miles per hour, but fortunately, others are made which can run two miles an hour and will stop when requested.

Very few automobiles break down any more, but the number of owners who break up is steadily increasing.

This is because the automobile is no longer a weird hobby, but a badge of prosperity, and a great many people are wearing the badge who can't afford to pay their dues.

Automobiles are more costly now, because they are more reliable, and also because hundreds of people are busy every day inventing new things on them.

Ten years ago an automobile would go 10 miles and then stop a month, because of a fifty-cent breakdown.

But now an auto owner will go 200 miles, pay $35 in fines, wear out $50 of tires, eat $10 worth of food, knock $75 out of a $40 buggy and neglect $1,000 worth of business all in one day.

The number of automobiles made in this county next year will approach 225,000. This will not supply one-fourth of the people who want them, but after the people who can afford them have bought, there will be 100,000 left—and they will all be sold.

—From The Ford Times.

A JUVENILE COURT.

The State of Kentucky is being aroused to interest in the question of establishing a juvenile action in connection with her county courts, so perhaps, a few words from a volunteer probation worker will help to put this new order of things clearly before the readers of the Recorder.

It has long been a matter of concern to both judges and counsel that children are sometimes brought into court, and to lessen the evils resulting from this practice, an act creating a juvenile court system was passed in 1906. This was amended in 1908 to its present form, which in a few words is as follows:

County Judges may hold a session of court, at which only cases involving children are to be tried, and this is to be done with as little publicity as possible. The county judge may select a board of advisors of not less than six nor more than ten persons who are expected to have the interests of the children of the county at heart, and who will cheerfully assist the judge in carrying out measures for their benefit. County judges may also appoint a paid officer to be known as chief probation officer, whose duties are to investigate each and every case reported to him, and to act promptly on it, always considering the best interests of the child. This is the working force of the juvenile court; judge, Advisory Board and chief probation officer, and they must be in harmony or else work among delinquent and neglected children had better not be attempted at all.

The process of dealing with a dependent child is comparatively simple. "When such a case is reported to the probation officer he tries to find a home for the child. Always the watchword should be 'A Good Home' for every child in Kentucky," and on this theory probation officers should try to find relatives or neighbors who will take the orphan child into their hearts as well as his home. If no such home can be found, he transfers the child to the appropriate State institution, where trained nurses and nurses, as well as they can, supply the lack of a home.

When a case of neglect or delinquency is reported, however, the probation officer faces a more complicated problem. The home probably is at fault; the father may be a drunkard, a drug victim, a hopeless invalid, or lazy and good for nothing. The mother may be a good woman struggling the best she can against the terrible handicaps of conditions, or she too, may be a worthless character. The probation officer must examine the home conditions, and using his best judgment, aided by a kind heart, must act as is best for the child. Now here someone may say, "What if the mother is a drunkard, a drug victim, or a worthless character?"

No—not if the home is decent, clean and moral, and if the children are cared for, as to bodily cleanliness and decent behavior, but if a family sinks to the point of being filthy in body and habits, if the children beg, steal, use vulgar and profane language, or are allowed to associate with others who are of this class—Yes, most emphatically, a State can be no better than its citizens, and even if only a small percentage of the law-makers and voters are ignorant and immoral by just so much is the moral tone of the entire State lowered.

Probation officers must use special care in dealing with cases of feeble-mindedness. These sad cases give us the greatest trouble because of the train of evil consequences following—even a single case of unrestrained low mentality, and also, because the parents of such children seem to have a peculiar tenderness for them, and to be especially resentful when any suggestions are made as to restraint or institutional care. The crimes of the feeble minded are most commonly, rape, incest and arson, and the prosecutions for these crimes cost our State an immense sum annually. How much better it would be to protect every feeble minded person from childhood to death, so that these crimes could not be committed.

The practical points I would like to emphasize are these:—The county judge that expects to institute a juvenile session ought to select for his advisory board men and women who will not be mere figure heads. Leave out your Colonels and Honorables and choose helpers who will not turn away in disgust when asked to personally investigate some distressing case, and lend a hand in bettering home conditions.

The county judge can also interest every school teacher and young doctor in his county, and thus provide himself with a force of volunteer probation workers who will be easy for the judge to meet all teachers at the county institute, and explain to them the plan and workings of the juvenile session. The county judge is also a sort of father confessor in family troubles, and he can, many a time, prevent a separation or divorce which may cause the children to become either dependent or delinquent, and thus become a charge on the State.

Remember, that all over our country earnest men and women are engaged in this cause, and the central thought of it all, is better parents, better homes and better children.

The Regulation of Hotels.

The traveling men's organizations in Kentucky are calling for hotel regulation by the coming General Assembly, and the president of the Kentucky Hotel Association has declared himself strongly in favor of it. If the traveling men and the leading hotel men agree that such a measure is needed no good reason seems lacking why the Legislature should not act favorably.

It is generally conceded that commercial travelers are well posted on the hotel question. They are familiar with all sorts of hotels, from the metropolitan caravansary to the wayside inn. They know the good places to spend Sunday. They know the hostesses whose prices are high and accommodations are meager. They sound the praises of the rural landlord who makes a specialty of fried chicken and home-made pies. They tip it off to the new men on the road that it is advisable to dodge certain towns and to strain a point to make certain other towns for decent food and comfortable lodging. As a rule these evangelists of commerce are not kickers, but many of them virtually live in hotels and, naturally, they want a fair return for the expense money and a fighting chance for some of the comforts of home.

The president of the Kentucky Hotel Association is engaged actively in the hotel business and it may be assumed reasonably that he knows something about hotels. In a communication to the Courier-Journal a few days ago he made the statement that Kentucky has the worst hotels of any State south of Mason and Dixon's Line. Assuredly, this is a regrettable situation and one that should be remedied if possible. Kentucky has many good hotels, but she must have a large number of poor ones if her average of excellence is below that of so many of her sister States. It is important that we have good hotels, clean and sanitary, and conducted with some regard for the health and welfare of the traveling public.—C-J.

SENATOR BYRON GIVES VIEWS ON THE BURLEY POOL

The Former Legislator From Bracken Tells Farmers They Stand in Own Light.

BURLEY COMPANY HAS OUTSTRIPPED BANKS

Believes Doubting Thomases Will Regret Refusal When Too Late.

Senator W. A. Byron, of Bracken County, who is an ardent advocate of the ten-year pooling plan of the Burley Tobacco Society and who believes that in this plan, which carries with it the idea of manufacturing the tobacco into a finished product, the Burley growers of Kentucky may hope to save themselves from starvation prices, gives his views on the subject and points out how he views the situation as follows:

"I have been asked so many times what I thought of the 1911 pooling plan proposed by the Burley Tobacco Society that I will venture in this brief article to give my opinion in hopes that it may be of use to some, at least, of my friends throughout the Burley district.

"To commence with, I will state a fact known to most, if not all, of you, that the Burley Tobacco Company will, when all the 1909 pooled tobacco is disposed of, have a capital stock of one million ($1,000,000) dollars. In the handling of the 1909 pool—grading, pricing, insuring, etc.—the Burley Tobacco Company, up to date, has made about four hundred thousand ($400,000) dollars, which amount, added to its capital stock, now gives that company a capital stock of about fourteen hundred thousand ($1,400,000) dollars. Now the proposition, as I understand it, is to invest this amount, in addition to whatever of the 1911 crop is pooled up, in a manufacturing enterprise in Lexington, and in deciding whether or not one wants to go into a pool of this kind the primary and important question to be considered is whether or not he wants to purchase stock in this company.

Ordinarily I would say that for the farmer this would not be the best thing to do; but this is not one of those ordinary efforts by ordinary men who sometimes make haphazard and foolish attempts to do things without either money, right counsel or the ability to meet and overcome the obstacles and difficulties which every new enterprise of such magnitude and purpose is sure to encounter.

Experienced Men at Helm.

"The men who are at the head of this movement are men of large experience in commercial life and especially in the tobacco world. They are mostly men of great individual wealth, not inclined to be identified with failures, and with the start that this company has in a financial way I see no reason why the proposed factory would not prove a great success from the beginning. A farmer can now become identified with the proposed manufacturing enterprise by pooling his farm for ten years; and when he does this it means that during those ten years not less than 20 per cent nor more than 50 per cent of the tobacco which he raises each year during the continuance of the contract, will go as stock in the proposed factory. The remaining per cent of his crop he is at liberty to dispose of when, where and to whom he pleases. He also handles and prices all of his own tobacco if he desires to do so.

Time To Act is Now.

"Of course when the proposed factory starts and begins to pay large dividends, as I confidently believe that it will, there will be a grand rush of slow doubting Thomases to get in on what they will then know to be the greatest money-making proposition ever put up to the farmers of this state, and if the farmer could stay out until the success of the enterprise is thus thoroughly demonstrated and then go in on the same terms on which he can get in now, my advice to him would be to stay out until even the small element of chance now visible to the naked eye of the abnormally suspicious is entirely removed; but, unfortunately for him, he can not do this, for in common with most of his other experiences he must have faith and take some chances. It would be a very poor farmer indeed who would say I will not waste my seed to plant a crop in the spring, but will wait till fall and see what kind of returns Farmer Smith, who is so foolish as to take the chances of sowing in the spring, will get. No farmer is quite so foolish as to take this course in reference to his crops, but many of them are doing this very thing now in regard to their investment in the Burley Tobacco Company. I hear many farmers say that they don't want any stock in the company. Well, what boots that? You already have it, and I am sure that you don't want to throw it away. But they say, 'We will have our money.' Well, you can get your money if someone will buy your stock and pay for it, but you will know that you cannot arbitrarily demand your money and compel the company to pay it, any more than you can go to a bank in which you happen to have, say, five hundred ($500) dollars' worth of stock and compel it to pay you back the money which you invested in it.

Why Doubt Management?

"Again, some farmers will say, 'We don't believe that the corporation will be honestly managed, hence we don't want any stock in it;' and many of these farmers will take stock in a bank and feel that they have done a wise and conservative thing, never worrying for a single minute over the possible and probable mismanagement of the bank's financial affairs. Yet the people who are managing the affairs of the Burley Tobacco Company are, to say the least, equal in integrity, intelligence and general business capacity to the average banker in this or any other state.

"To show you that it pays to manufacture tobacco it is only necessary to point out the fact that the original stock of the American Tobacco Company was fifty million ($50,000,000) dollars, and that company is now paying large dividends, about four or five times a year, on five hundred million ($500,000,000) dollars. And this, farmers, is being done at your expense.

Made Nearly Half Million.

"This Burley Tobacco Company, farmers, with its fourteen hundred thousand ($1,400,000) dollars in stocks, belongs to you. You organized it and put up every dollar of its stock, and last year, in its operation, it made nearly a half million ($500,000) dollars, and now what you propose doing with it? If you stay with it and see that it is honestly and conservatively managed, it will, in my opinion, be the most paying proposition you ever had. But if you stand aloof and 'cuss' and abuse it for a season and then after a short time forget that you ever had it, of course someone is going to take care of it or it is, evidently too valuable to be discarded by everybody. If the farmers of the Burley district owned a bank in Lexington with a capital stock of a million and a half ($1,500,000) dollars, and that bank was making money as fast as the Burley Tobacco Company is, I am sure that you would want all your neighbors to know the fact that you were the proud possessors of some of the stock in that bank and you would also know who managed that bank and how it was managed. Well, why are you not equally business-like and sensible about your Burley Tobacco Company?

Has Beaten All Banks.

"There is no bank in the state that has made as much money as your company has, in the same length of time, and placed on the footing where its promoters are now aiming to put it; there is no bank in the United States that will pay as well in proportion to the amount invested as this company will. It is your company. Look to it and never lose sight of it for a single minute. Under its character its management is always subject to your will, in making these suggestions I want to assure you that I have no motive whatever, except to advance your material interests. I am not employed by the Burley Tobacco Society in any capacity whatever, and I firmly believe that the farmer who has the wisdom to stay with this great corporation which he has helped to build up will reap large financial rewards. Keep your eye on the farmer who stays with this company and on the farmer who takes his tobacco to the 'loose leaf' warehouse and see who is ahead, financially, at the end of five years."

THE BOY AND THE BICYCLE

Fat Man Moved to Remorse After Witnessing Effects of Anger on Bike and Boy.

A fat man was completely pursuing his way through a cross street. He carried an open umbrella and occasionally wiped his moist face on a large silk handkerchief.

Suddenly around the corner came a small boy on a bicycle. He turned so quickly that the fat man had no time to get out of the way. Nor had the boy any chance to sheer away from his bulky obstacle.

The front wheel struck the fat man a glancing blow, shaking his dignity and scraping his leg.

As for the boy, he and the bicycle went down with a crash. But the lad was up again in a moment and raising the bicycle bent over it solidly.

The fat man was mad. He was so mad that he sputtered incoherently, and then with a vicious swing of one of his tan shoes kicked a spoke out of the offending wheel.

"There, kid," he roared, "I guess that'll teach you not to ride on the sidewalk!"

The boy stared at the dangling spoke.

"What did you do that for?" he whined. "It took me all the year to save up for that bike—now look at it!"

And he knuckled his eyes with a grimy fist.

The fat man was touched. His rage suddenly vanished. He fumbled in his pocket and drew out a dollar bill.

"There, kid," he said, "take this and get the wheel fixed."

The boy let go of the machine and grabbed the bill.

"Say, you can have th' bike," he yelled, and scooted around the corner as fast as his legs would carry him.

TRAGEDY OF TOMATO VINE

Practical Person Makes Discovery
After Neighbors Had Given Voice
To Their Werdgment.

Now doth the amateur agriculturist flourish and wax proud at his Luther Burbank achievements, says the Brooklyn Eagle. One such nursed a lone tomato plant from delicate and sickly infancy to robust maturity. With all a mother's tender care he ministered to that plant. He watered it, brushed the dust off it, pleaded with it, encouraging it to better things. Then one day a member of the family rushed into the house with glad tidings. There was a real tomato on the vine.

What an assemblage there was about that plant! The block was depopulated temporarily. Amateur agriculturists climbed on each other's necks to view the wonder. The head of the house inspected it through a magnifying glass. His spouse clasped her hands and exclaimed: "At last! We'll have our own salad from our own vine." Even the watchman from a row of empty houses nearby was called to look, and he remarked solemnly that he "never saw such a large tomato on such a small vine."

Then came along one of those horribly practical persons, who said it couldn't be, and had to have a closer look. He spotted it all by his discovery that the tomato had been tied on with a string, and if you want to know who tied it on ask the woman who lives next door.

Know Your Work and Do It.

There is perennial nobleness and even sacredness in work; were he never so benighted, forgetful of his high calling, there is always hope in a man that actually and earnestly works. In idleness alone is there perpetual despair. Work, never so mammoth, mean, is in communication with nature; the real desire to get work done will itself lead one more and more to truth, to nature's appointments and regulations which are truth. The latest gospel in this world is: Know thy work and do it. Know thyself—long enough has that poor self of this tormented thee; thou wilt never get to know it, I believe. Think it not thy business, this of knowing thyself; thou art an unknowable individual; know what thou canst work at, and work at it like Hercules! That will be thy better plan.—Thomas Carlyle.

Nothing to Work On.

Gen. Horatio C. King, secretary of the Society of the Army of the Potomac, was narrating his memories of the Civil War. "We suffered many hardships on both sides," said General King, "but the Confederates suffered more. I remember a grizzled old negro who at the outbreak of the Spanish war applied for a place as an army cook. 'What experience have you had?' the old fellow was asked. 'I was cook, sah, fo' a Confederate regiment in sixty-four,' he answered. 'That is, sah, I had the job of cook, but, to tell the truth, I didn't work at it.' 'Why not?' 'There wasn't nothing to cook, sah.'"

Time Is Money.

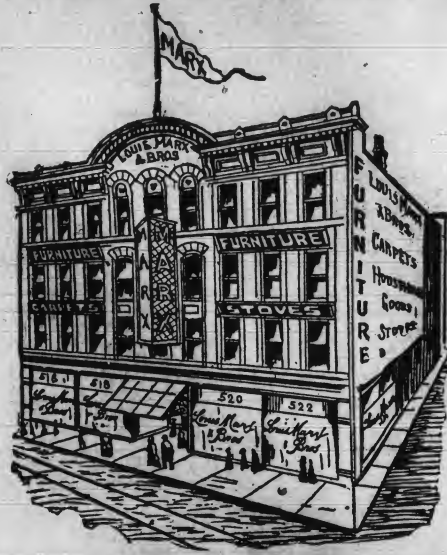

"I want you to understand that my time is valuable. Time is money with me," snapped the man who had been held up.

"Is it worth as high as a dollar a minute?" asked the merchant.

"As much as that, at least."

"Well, I was going to take up about two minutes talking to you, but since you are so all-fired expensive, I'll only use thirty seconds. Then you can give me the dollar and a half change, and we'll call it square."

ACTIVITY

Of The Tobacco Market.

General Resume of 1911 Transactions With Statistical Review—Outlook For the New Year.

Something like the conditions that prevailed in the old days of active competition and heavy sales marked the transactions in the Cincinnati burley tobacco market during the year 1911. Because of the large stock of pooled burley of the 1909 crop in local warehouses the opening week of the new year last January was marked by increased offerings, due to the activities of the Burley Tobacco Society, which sought to take advantage of improved market conditions and the tendency toward better prices. Heavy offerings were the rule up to the first of May, when the Burley Tobacco Society suddenly withdrew from the market, following an apparent slackening in the manufacturing demand and the consequent irregularity of prices for grades they had to offer. The market for the balance of the year was shown by a steady decline in the shipments of tobacco independent of the pool and the new 1910 crop. While the prices which have prevailed the past year have been considerably under the high record figures during the high tide of the pooling movement, quotations throughout the year have been in the main quite satisfactory to the seller who is satisfied with a reasonable return for his product. The 1910 crop of tobacco was not of a superior quality, and but little fine color or fancy leaf was obtained. These styles, when shown, have brought figures fully commensurate with the quality. The extremely common sorts ruled firm throughout the year, but the medium grades, because of their abundance, were invariably a trifle irregular, and at times extremely weak. Another factor that has had its effect on the market has been the uncertain buying of the American Tobacco Company, usually the heaviest bidder. The readjustment of the great corporations affairs to comply with the conditions of the Government naturally had the effect of curbing their purchases in the open market. Despite this drawback, however, the market most of the time was as active as could be desired in view of existing industrial conditions.

The total offerings during the year 1911 at the various warehouses aggregated 43,133 hhds, as contrasted with 21,685 hhds last year. This is an increase of 21,447 hhds, or almost 100 per cent.

This is the best showing made in many years' time, transactions exceeding the active year of 1907, when the aggregate offerings amounted to 40,631 hhds.

The total rejections during 1911 amounted to 10,611 hhds, or 23 per cent of the aggregate offerings. While this percentage is somewhat higher than has prevailed in recent years, it is partially explained by the unusual increase in the offerings and the tendency of certain holders to await a turn in the market. The normal rejections in the Cincinnati market are approximately 21 per cent.

Private sales the past year amounted to 3,669 hhds, against 897 in 1910 and 12,921 in 1909. The increased activity in the market is plainly indicated by the gain in the total receipts, which amounted to 41,022 hhds, as against 21,560 hhds in 1910. This was an increase of 19,462 hhds, or 88 per cent. Deliveries for the year totaled 32,234 hhds, as contrasted with 18,965 hhds in 1910, an increase of 13,269 hhds, or 70 per cent.

The stock on hand December 31 in all the Cincinnati warehouses amounts to 18,355 hhds, as contrasted with 9,797 hhds in storage the corresponding date last year. This is an increase of 783 hhds, or about 80 per cent.

Friday afternoon, Dec. 29, 1911, marked the close of the first part of the school year at this place. The school year had been running order and the first part of the session has been highly successful. On that afternoon the teachers and pupils gathered in the High School room to enjoy a pleasant little exercise consisting of a capital match. The High School pupils had previously challenged the intermediate room to a spelling contest at which the intermediates were defeated. Not content with the defeat, however, ten of them returned the challenge to ten of the High School pupils. The intermediates easily won the victory, score 6 to 4. After the close of this the pupils were given a candy treat and the teachers were the recipients of a number of nice presents. Rev. Brooks room presented him with a nice rocking chair, Prof. Skinner received a beautiful watch chain from his pupils, while Mr. Bondurant was given several presents from pupils. During this part of the school session a number of matches had been enjoyed, which seems to stir up more enthusiasm on the part of the pupils, and stimulates popular interest, a factor which is highly commended by all who are interested in education.

KNOCKER'S KLUB.

At Its Last Meeting Transacts Considerable Business.

The local Knockers' Club held its annual election of officers on the 27th ult., at which Little Knock was advanced to the position of Big Knock. The gentleman who occupied the position of Big Knock, last year, was honored with the title of "Big Knock" and the honor of that of a Past Presiding officer in other societies. There being several candidates for the position of Little Knock, an election resulted in one receiving a majority of the votes cast although the balloting was continued for several hours, and the indications are that the contest may continue through several meetings. During the vacancy the duties of the office will devolve upon Hamme, who is one of the candidates and very anxious to be regularly installed into the office.
Before the meeting adjourned considerable business was transacted, some of which was as follows:
Sledge paid dues 43 months in advance and asked that he be granted a traveling card, which was ordered issued with a large hammer impressed thereon, that being the emblem of the organization.
On motion and second a commission was issued to Sledge authorizing him to institute knockers clubs anywhere in this jurisdiction.
Big Knock proceeded to the election of the regular order of business and when called for the "good of the order," a member arose and stated that he had been officially informed that the order of General Tappers desired to be granted membership in this order as a body, and moved that the request be granted. The instant motion was seconded, Ham, or rather Little Knock, sprang to his feet and made a vigorous speech in opposition to the action, among other things declaring that he is opposed from every angle anything that squints at woman's suffrage. The ballot was taken and there being a single black ball in the box the motion was declared carried and the Gentle Tappers' request for membership granted. In order that Little Knock might square himself with the order of Gentle Tappers he was appointed a committee to inform them of the action of the Knockers Club. He accepted the appointment and declared he would have a full force of Gentle Tappers in attendance at the next meeting of the Club.

A motion was made that the office of Master Mechanic be created and that its tenure be for life or during good behavior. The motion will be acted upon at the next meeting.
If your children are subject to attacks of croup, watch for the first symptoms, hoarseness. Give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as soon as the child becomes hoarse. It will stop the attack and ward off. For sale by all druggists.

Very small things put a large piece of machinery out of commission some times. It was the case in this office yesterday when a piece of a small from pin hung up the big newspaper press for an hour or two. After locating the trouble it was soon remedied.

"In there," he said. "No other place would suit."

As the door closed, his arms went out and around her. Then he stood with his hands on her shoulders and looking down into her face.

"Dede, if I tell you, flat and straight, that I'm going up to live on that ranch at Glen Ellen, that I ain't taking a cent with me, that I'm going to scratch for every bite I eat, and that I ain't going to play any card at the business game again, will you come along with me?"

She gave a glad little cry, and he nestled her in closely. But the next moment she had thrust herself out from him to the old position at arm's length.

"How is this possible? How can you leave your business? Has anything happened?"

"No, nothing's happened yet, but it's going to, blame quick. I've taken your preaching to heart, and I've come to the patient form. I've taken my last drink. You're crying, whisky-soak, but your husband won't be that. He's going to grow into another man so quick you won't know him. A couple of months from now, up there in Glen Ellen, you'll wake up some morning and find you've got a perfect stranger in the house with you, and you'll have to get introduced to him all over again. You'll say, 'I'm Mrs. Harshaw, who are you?' And I'll say, 'I'm Elam Harshaw's younger brother. I've just arrived from Alaska to attend the funeral.' What funeral?"

"You'll say, 'Why the funeral of that good-for-nothing, gambling, whisky-drinking Burnin' Daylight—the man that died of fatty degeneration of the heart from sitting in night and day at the business game.'"

"Yes, ma'am, I'll say, 'he's sure a gone coon, but I've come to take his place and make you happy.' And, ma'am, if you'll allow me, I'll just meander down to the pasture and milk the cow while you're getting breakfast."

"But you haven't answered my question," she reproached him, as she emerged, rosy and radiant, from the embrace that had accompanied the culmination of his narrative.

"Now just what do you want to know?" he asked.

"I want to know how all this is possible? How you are able to leave your business at a time like this? What you mean by saying that something was going to happen quickly?"

"Let's go and get married," he urged, all the whimsicality of his utterance duplicated in his eyes. "I've been working like forty horses ever since this blamed panic set in, and all the time some of those ideas you've given me were getting ready to sprout. Well, they sprouted this morning, that's all. I knew I wanted to ride in the hills times more than I wanted to go to the office. And I knew all the time it was impossible. And why? Because of the office. The office wouldn't let me. And then I made up my mind that I was to the dividing of the ways. One way led to the office. The other way led to Berkeley. And I took the Berkeley way. I'm never going to set foot in the office again. That's all sons, finished, over and done with, and I'm letting it slide clean to me and then some. I'm wiping the slate clean. I'm letting it all go smash. When them thirty million dollars stood up to my face and said I couldn't go out with you in the hills today, I knew the time had come for me to put my foot down. And my strength down. I've got you, and that little ranch in Sonoma. That's all I want, and that's all I'm going to save out, along Daylight shook his head and smiled. "Please tell Mr. Hogan to hang up. I'm done with the office and I don't want to hear anything about anything."

A minute later she was back again. "He refuses to hang up. He'd like me to tell you that Urwin is in the office now, waiting to see you, and Harrison, too. Mr. Hogan said that Grimshaw and Hodgkins are in trouble. That it looks as if they are going to break. And he said something about protection."

It was startling information. Both Urwin and Harrison represented big banking corporations, and Daylight knew that if the house of Grimshaw and Hodgkins went it would precipitate a number of failures and start a flurry of serious dimensions. But Daylight smiled, and shook his head.

He caught her by the hand and drew her to him.

"You let Hegan hang on to that line till he's tired. We can't be wasting a second on him on a day like this."

"But I know something of the fight you have been making," Dede contended. "If you stop now, all the work you have done, everything, will be destroyed. You have no right to do it. You can't do it."

Daylight was obstinate. He shook his head and smiled tantalizingly.

"Nothing will be destroyed, Dede. Nothing. You don't understand this business game. It's done on paper. All I stand for is paper. I've got the paper for thousands of acres of land. All right. Burn up the paper, and burn me along with it. The land remains, don't it? Nothing is going to be lost but one pile of the docks, not one railroad spike, not one ounce of steam out of the gauge of a ferry-boat. The cars will go on running, whether I hold the paper or somebody else holds it."

By this time Hegan had arrived in an automobile. The host of it came in through the open window, and they saw it stop alongside the big red machine. In the car were Urwin and Harrison, while Jones sat with the chauffeur.

"I'll see Hegan," Daylight told Dede. "There's no need for the rest. They can wait in the machine."

"Is he drunk?" Hegan whispered to Dede at the door.

She shook her head and showed him in.

"Good morning, Larry," was Daylight's greeting. "Sit down and rest your feet. You sure seem to be in a flutter."

"I am," the little Irishman snapped back. "Grimshaw and Hodgkins are going to smash if something isn't done quick. Why didn't you come to the office? What are you going to do?"

"Nothing," Daylight drawled lazily. "Except let them smash. I guess. I've had no dealings with Grimshaw and Hodgkins. I don't owe them anything. Besides, I'm going to smash myself. Look here, Larry, you know me. You know when I make up my mind I mean it. Well, I've made up my mind. I'm tired of the whole game. I'm letting go of it as fast as I can, and a smash is the quickest way to let go. All you've got to do is to protect yourself and all our friends. Now you listen to me while I tell you what to do. Everything in good shape to do it. Nobody must get hurt. Everybody that stood by me must come through without damage. All the back wages and salaries must be paid pronto. To all the money I've switched away from the water company, the street cars, and the ferries must be switched back. And you won't get hurt yourself none. Every company you got stock in will come through."

"What have you done to him?" Hegan snarled at Dede.

"Hold on there, Larry." For the first time Daylight's voice was sharp, shrill all the old-time cruelty in his face stood forth. "This Hegan is going to be my wife, and while I don't mind your talking to her all you want, you've got to use a different tone of voice or you'll be heading for a hospital, which will sure be an unexpected sort of smash. And let me tell you one other thing. This all is my doing. She says I'm crazy, too."

Dede stepped forward, where she confronted the two men.

"Wait," she said. "I want to say something. Elam, if you do this insane thing, I won't marry you. I refuse to marry you."

"I'll take my chance on that," Daylight said. "And now, Larry, you'd better be going. I'll be at the hotel in a little while, and since I'm not going to step into the office again, bring all papers to sign, and the rest over to my room. And you can get me on the phone there any time. This smash is going through. Say, I'm quit and done."

He turned to Dede as soon as Hegan was gone, and took her by the hand.

"And now, little woman, you needn't come to the office any more. Consider yourself discharged."

"I'd cry, if I thought it would do you good," she threatened.

"In which case I reckon I'd have to hold you in my arms more and more and sort of soothe you down," he threatened back.

As he stood at the top of the steps, leaving, she said:—

"You needn't send those men. Therea will be no packing, because I am going to marry you."

"I'm not a bit scared," he answered, and went down the steps.

CHAPTER XX.

Three days later, Daylight rode to Berkeley in his red car. It was for the last time, for on the morrow the big machine passed into another's possession. He had been a strenuous possessor, for his arm had been the biggest the panic had precipitated in California. The papers had been filled with it, and a great cry of indignation had gone up from the very men who later found that Daylight had fully protected their interests. It was these facts, coming slowly to light, that gave rise to the widely repeated charge that Daylight had gone insane. It was the unanimous conviction among business men that no sane man could possibly behave in such fashion. On the other hand, neither the automobile nor the house, nor his affair with Dede became public, so the only conclusion attainable was that the wild financier from Alaska had gone lunatic. And Daylight had grinned and confirmed the suspicion by refusing to see the reporter. He had waited the automobile before Dede's door, and met her with his same rigid tactics, enclosing her in his arms before a word could be uttered.

"I've done it," he announced. "You've seen the newspapers, and I've seen the newspapers, and I've just talked around to find out what you mean by starting for Glen Ellen. I'll have to be so soon for it's real expensive living in Oakland these days. My board at the hotel is only paid to the end of the week, and I can't afford to stay on after that. And beginning with tomorrow I've got to eat up the nickel cars, and they sure eat up the nickel cars."

He paused, and waited, and looked at her. Indecision and trouble showed on her face. Then the smile he knew so well began to grow on her lips and in her eyes, until she threw back her head and laughed in the old forthright boyish way.

"When are those men coming to pack for me?" she asked.

And again she laughed and stimulated a vain attempt to escape his bear-like arms.

"Dear Elam," she whispered, "dear Elam, I've got an idea. For the first time, she kissed him on the cheek.

"Now, I've got an idea," Daylight said. "We're running away from titles, and you have no kith nor kin, so it doesn't seem exactly right that we should start off by getting married in a city. So here's the idea: I'll run up to the ranch and get things in shape around the house and give the caretaker his walking-papers. You follow me in a couple of days, coming on the morning train. I'll have the preacher hired and waiting. And here's another idea. You bring your riding gear. And as soon as the ceremony's over, you can go to the hotel and change. Then out you come, and you find me waiting with a couple of horses, and we'll ride over the landscape so as you can see the prettiest parts of the ranch the first thing. And she's sure pretty, that ranch. And now that it's settled, I'll be waiting for you at the morning train day after tomorrow."

Dede blushed as she spoke.

"You are such a hurricane."

"Well, ma'am," he drawled, "I sure hate to burn daylight. And you and I mean it. We've made up our minds. We might have been married years ago."

Two days later, Daylight stood waiting outside the little Glen Ellen hotel. The ceremony was over, and he had left Dede to go inside and change into her riding-habit while he brought the horses. He held them now. Bob and Mab, and in the shadow of the watering-trough Wolf lay and looked on. Already two days of ardent California sun and touched with new fires the ancient bronze in Daylight's face. But warmer still was the glow that came into his cheeks and burned in his eyes as he saw Dede come out in the familiar corduroy skirt and leggings of the old Piedmont days. There was warmth and glow in her own face as she answered his gaze and glanced on past him to the horses. Then she saw Mab. But her gaze leaped back to the man.

"Oh, Elam!" she breathed.

Many persons, themselves city-bred, and city reared, have fled to the soil and succeeded in winning great happiness. In such cases they have succeeded only by going through a process of savage disillusionment. But with Dede and Daylight it was different. They had both been born on the soil, and they knew its naked simplicities and rawer ways. They were like two persons, after far wandering, who had merely come home again. There was less of the unexplained in their meeting, and the city financier had died a quick death on the ranch, and his younger brother, the Daylight from Alaska, had taken his place. The threatened foundation of fat had subsided, and all his old-time Indian leanness and hardness of muscle had returned.

unripped trade. They made fewer mistakes. They already knew, and it was a joy to remember what they had forgotten.

And another thing they learned was that it was easier for one who has gorged at the feast-pots to content himself with the meagreness of a crust, than for one who has known only the crust. Not that their life was meagre. It was that they found keener delights and deeper satisfactions in little things. Daylight, who had played the game in its biggest and most fantastic aspects, found that here, on the slopes of Sonoma Mountain, it was still the same old game. Man had still work to perform, forces to combat, obstacles to overcome. When he experimented in a small way at raising a few pigeons for market, he found no less zest in calculating in aqua than formerly when he had calculated in millions. Achievement was no less achievement, while the process of it seemed more rational and received the sanction of his own mind.

The domestic cat that had gone wild and that preyed on his pigeons, he found, by the comparative standard, to be of no less paramount importance than a Charles Killebrew in the field of finance, trying to raid him for seven millions. The hawks and weasels and "coons" were so many Dowdells, Lettons, and Guggenhamers that struck at him secretly. The sea of wild vegetation that tossed its surf against the boundaries of all his clearings and that sometimes crept in and flooded in a single week was no mean enemy to contend with and subdue. His fastidious vegetable garden in the nook of hills that failed of its best was a problem of engrossing importance, and when he solved it by putting in drain tiles, the joy of the achievement was ever with him. He never worked in it and found the soil unpacked and unstable without experiencing the thrill of accomplishment.

There was the matter of the plumbing. He was enabled to purchase the materials through a lucky sale of a number of his hair brides. The work he did himself, though more than once he was forced to call in Dede to hold the tight with a pipe-wrench. And in the end, when the bath-tub and the stationary tubs were installed and in working order, he could scarcely tear himself away from the contemplation of what his hands had wrought.

First even in misting him, Dede sought and found him, lamp in hand, starting with silent glees at the tube. He rubbed his hand over their smooth wooden lips and laughed aloud, and as he was shame-faced as any boy when she caught him thus secretly exulting in his own provocation.

It was this adventure in wood-work, and plumbing that brought about the building of the little workshop, where he slowly gathered a collection of loved tools. And he, who in the old days, out of his millions, could purchase himself whatever he pleased, immediately whatever he most desired, learned the new joy of the possession that follows upon the economy and desire long delayed. He waited three months before during the extravagance of a Yankee screw-driver, and his glee in the marvelous little mechanism was so keen that Dede conceived of a further great idea. For six months she saved her money, which was hers by right of allotment and on his birthday presented him with a turning-lathe of wonderful simplicity and multifarious efficiencies. And their mutual delight in the lathe, which was his, was only equalled by their delight in the lathe, which was Dede's special private property.

Daylight had made no assertion of total abstinence, though he had not taken a drink for months after the New Hog Disease.

The Henderson Herald reports that hundreds of hogs have died in that county and hundreds of others are affected from a new disease, which has so far baffled medical skill. Farmers and veterinary surgeons who have investigated say they have never seen anything like it, and the only solution offered for a remedy was that the hogs were to be killed. The loss to swine breeders in Henderson county from the new disease has already amounted to thousands of dollars, and new cases are being reported almost daily. Hogs are said to die almost instantly when they contract the disease, not living long enough for a remedy to be tested. As everyone knows who has examined his corn, there is a very large percentage of rotten corn this year. Storms blew down much of the corn in the early fall and this rotting before gathering time. The drought also caused much corn to rot, partly mature and this is very faulty. There was also much late corn, on account of farmers failing to get out a full crop of tobacco, and much corn infected with worms. So it is easy to see that if this disease is caused by faulty corn, it will not be difficult for the disease to spread to the country to become infected. Horses and other live stock are also in danger, as they succumb much more easily to bad food than hogs.

New Adjutant-General.

Louisville, Jan. 4.—Colonel William B. Haldeman, newspaper editor and brother of Bruce Haldeman, President of the American Newspaper Editors' Association, was appointed Adjutant-General of Kentucky by Governor McCreary. Col. Haldeman, a Confederate veteran, and former Commander of the local militia, has accepted the post for six months, or until the annual summer encampment of the Kentucky Guards explaining that this conditional acceptance will permit him to endeavor to right the "disorder" into which the affairs of the National State Guard has fallen.

What Makes A Woman?

One hundred and twenty pounds, more or less, of bone and muscle don't make a woman. It is a good foundation. Put into it health and strength and she may rule a kingdom. But that's just what Electric Bitters gives her. Thousands bless them for overcoming fainting and dizzy spells, for dispelling weakness, nervousness, backache and tired, listless, worn out feeling. FRIEND OF THE YOUNG MEN

Undergraduate Make Themselves at Home in Apartment of Harvard Professor.

If you climb the south stairway of Hollis hall, one of the ancient and honorable dormitories of Harvard, every Saturday night after ten o'clock you will find Charles Townsend Copeland in his room under the roof by the side of a "sea coal fire," and, overlooking from a chair and settled to the floor at his feet, a crowd of undergraduates. There are athletes, editors of college papers, Socialists, athletes, gentlemen, social stars and the lesser or whose light is hid under the college bush.

It is a wonderful room, lined from floor to ceiling with books. The broad mantel and the little wall space are covered up with signed pictures of great people of the past—about and all the long generations of boys whose friend he has been. Over the door is a horseshoe and a bunch of roan berries. The only light is from the fire, perhaps a candle on the mantelpiece, and the reading light to the left of the fire, where sits the little man, intently smoking an infamous brand of cigarettes. Everybody talks of the thing nearest his heart; everybody finds himself, alert, quick, almost brilliant. Startling theories are expounded and strange systems of philosophy. One tells of rowing, another of throwing the hammer, of "parades" in town, of clubs and books and college politics. I don't know whether the little man is interested in those things, which he has heard from so many classes, but he evidently loves the spirit of youth that is in them. Indeed, he once said that if ever he were cut off from youth he would wither up and die.

Assistant professor of English, Charles T. Copeland is known as "Gopey" by the university and by hundreds of graduates, and the nickname shows how much he is loved. But there is no one of the teaching force more feared and respected than he.—American Magazine.

YUAN PARTIAL TO AMERICANS

How Chinese Dictator Obeyed Orders of Late Dowager Empress and Saved Foreigners.

Maj. Henry Leonard of the United States marine corps, retired, who lost an arm at Tientsin and won a captaincy in Pekin, has seen a great deal of Yuan Shih-kai, who, according to dispatches, is now dictator in the Chinese empire. Yuan's attitude toward a great deal of his quarters in Pekin, says Maj. Leonard. "He spoke English fluently, but his father did not speak the language at all. For all that he seemed to have a great liking for Americans. That he is a man of great sagacity and foresight was shown by the way in which he obeyed the orders from the throne in 1904 to march against Pekin and crash the foreigners who were cooped up there in the legation quarters. At that time there was only 1,800 of us, all told, and matters had become so desperate with us when we were relieved that we had already drawn lots to see which would kill the women and children in case the Chinese army attacked us."

"Had I been against us he could easily have exterminated us, as we couldn't have had a shot. Yuan was not afraid to lead such an attack, but he never reached Pekin. He marched his army up and down in Shantung province, of which he was governor, for a whole month. He could always report that he was actively in the field against the foreigners, but he was careful not to get near enough to us to attack us."

"Therefore, when China decided it wanted peace the foreign governments had Yuan as the mediator, and the dowager empress thought so well of his services that he could have had anything he wished in China so long as he lived."

Odds and Ends of Time.

It is always easier to wish that we had more time than to use the time that we have. So, by wasting time we still further reduce the precious asset of the actual and only time that is really ours.

The person who is not utilizing all the time he has at the rate of 60 seconds to the minute would not be much better off with 48 hours to his day.

Those who turn out what is, to the rest of us, a discouragingly large amount of work, have simply learned the art of using all their time, particularly the nooks and corners, the odds and ends, of their time.

They utilize a five or ten minute nap of time as an asset as they do a half day. And so things get done, and their year's output seems stupendous.

With the average man, unless he can see several hours clear for a piece of work, he will attempt little out of the ordinary; and that is why he remains an average man.

Egyptian Customs Unchanged.

Lord Cromer, speaking at a meeting of the Egyptian exploration fund in London of the fundamental resemblances between ancient and modern Egyptians, said that: "It was not only conceivable but highly probable that during those centuries most inaccurately enumerated by Napoleon as forty, during which the Pyramids had frowned down on the Valley of the Nile, Egyptian manners and customs had, relatively speaking, undergone less striking changes than was the case with any other community of which we had any precise knowledge."

ANCESTOR OF A PRESIDENT

Peter R. Taft Gained Wife Prominence in His County by His Discharge of Duties of Surveyor.

Among the early settlers of Townshend, Vermont, was a family by the name of Taft. They came from Exeter, New Hampshire, in 1792. Their household gods, writes Hamilton Child in the "History of Windham County, Vermont," were loaded upon a sled drawn by oxen.

Peter R. Taft, fourteen years of age, accompanied the family. He came all the way on foot, and drove the cow. In the winter, like other farmers' boys, he did chores, helped prepare wood for the fire at home, and went to the district school. During the other months he helped his father on the farm. His education, however, was under the oversight of his father, who was a college graduate.

Fondness for mathematics resulted in his becoming a land surveyor, and in a few years he received the appointment of county surveyor. The accuracy of his work in establishing disputed lines brought him into public notice, and the time he was of age he was well known in every part of the county.

The duties of his office made necessary a long attendance on his part at the terms of the county court. On such occasions he was a willing as well as an attentive listener, and so gained a knowledge of many legal principles, which led to his receiving the appointment of trial justice.

From his first experience the public had great confidence in his fairness; and in his capacity as a magistrate, his decisions were received with approval. He devoted his spare moments to reading, and became a man of wide knowledge, whose foresight and executive talents were appreciated by those who came in contact with him. His grandson now lives in Washington.—Youth's Companion.

NAGGING HURTS THE CHILD

Constant Scolding Raises All That Is Unlovable in Young and Affects Whole Life.

Harsh language toward children, constant scolding and scolding, blows and taunting words do not preserve a life of refinement of thought and action for the children so brought up. Constant nagging and reprimanding do not improve the temper of the little folk nor do they make them more considerate or faithful to their duties.

On the contrary, just this course raises all that is unlovable and unlovable in the child and gives it character, a trend that places it in a false position throughout the after years.

There are people born with irritable dispositions, and none of them are ever improved by being kept in constant turmoil or by being allowed to have their words in their hands. Most children are amenable to persuasion and wonderfully responsive to kindness. Therefore, childhood should be the time for training the child to put forth the best that is in it and to repress his bad points until they are choked out, says an exchange. But no child can be improved under a regime of scolding, blows and taunting words, for the part of its elders, or the constant repetition of an attitude of hostility between those same elders.

The children of the home have sooner or later to take their places in the world and the character of those places is determined by the training given them through their earliest years. If love and sweetness of disposition are generated in their nature; if a fine sense of justice and a realization of the rights of others are given them as the underlying principles of life, they will reflect just these when they go out into the world and try to do their part and enter the type of home in which they grow up.

Crickets in Winter.

It is curious how the chirp of a cricket affects listeners. To some persons it is irritating and exasperating; to some it is cheery and suggestive of good fellowship.

Of this latter class is a friend of the Office Window, a resident of the upper West side, who has two rolicking crickets as his guests for the winter season. Welcome guests they are, too, for their host avers that they have come to know him, and that the sound of his footstep when he comes home at nightfall is regularly the signal for a vibrant, joyous greeting from his lively guests.

It is easy to believe that these crickets recognize their host. There is something companionable in insects of that species. That quality was appreciated by the man who wrote: "The Kettle began it, full five minutes by the little was-faded Dutch clock in the corner, before the cricket uttered a chirp."

Red Wine and Eggs.

The Duchess Helene of Vienna is reported to have proved the value of red wine as an aid to the production of hens' eggs. The duchess is said to have been advised to try wine on her poultry by Prof. Toubert of Fontenay-lez-Compiègne. Selecting a flock of one dozen healthy hens, the duchess fed six of them on wine soaked food, at the rate of one glass each a day. The other six had their same ration soaked with water. Within four months the wine-fed hens had laid 148 more eggs than those drinking only water. Half of the wine-fed hens are said to be much larger and of a finer quality. The cheapest grade of red wine was used.

WORK BERNHARDT'S RECIPE

Ravages of Old Father Time Held Back by Constant Activity and Regular Habits.

"It was Carlyle who, in his dogmatic fashion, declared that the only true happiness of a man was that of 'clear, decided activity in the sphere for which by nature and circumstances he has been fitted and appointed.' There is, perhaps, little in common between the grim old Scotchman and Mrs. Sarah Bernhardt, and yet we find the vivacious Frenchwoman still a mistress of her art at sixty-seven, and just about to sail for her native land after a tour of America, during which in the course of 25 weeks she has given 235 performances, 90 of them at one-night stands, netting for herself a round sum of a million dollars and for the theatrical managers probably double as much."

"Can you," a reporter for the New York Sun asked her in English, "leave behind you a recipe for youth and beauty?" The question was interpreted as meaning, "I could not be idle. I would be miserable. Always I must be doing something. Plenty of sleep, a sparing diet and not too much fresh air, so!" Later Madame voiced her sentiments even more expressively. "Health," she said, "comes from the good God, but I work like the devil."

SOMETHING NEW IN EGGS

Penguin Fruit May Soon Figure on American Hotel and Restaurant Menus.

Penguin eggs from South Africa may soon figure on American hotel and restaurant menus. Immense numbers of them are being gathered on several of the islands off the southern extremity of Africa, and one dealer alone has been offered to introduce them to the United States if some one will pay for the transportation of a sample case. The eggs easily could stand the journey, as the fast steamers make the run from Cape Town to Southampton in 19 days, thus bringing the penguin nest and the American epicure within a little more than three weeks of each other.

Ostrich eggs also are being used as food in South Africa, though naturally to a limited extent, as even there they do not grow on every bush. In California and Arizona, where the ostrich has been exterminated, these huge eggs are not less esteemed for the table, but to eat them generally is regarded as a wanton waste of possibilities in the way of feathers.

California is less scrupulous about eating the eggs of gulls and murrelets, which have been gathered in such numbers that the birds on the Farallone islands that steps have had to be taken to prevent the extermination of two sea birds. In Texas not only gulls and terns but herons have been robbed of their eggs with similar deplorable results.

Fault Brought Home.

Dr. James T. Docking, the president of Rust university, once discussed, in a Fourth of July address at Holly Springs, Miss., the treason of Benedict Arnold.

"Arnold's fault," he said, "was as plainly brought home to him as the fault of Fenimore Cooper's friend."

Fenimore Cooper gave a friend a copy of his last work, inscribing on the fly-leaf the words:

"John Blank, with the author's affection and esteem."

"A few months later Cooper came upon this same book at a second-hand dealer's. He bought it in and sent it to his friends along with a second inscription:

"This volume, purchased at a second-hand shop, is presented to John Blank with renewed affection and reiterated expressions of esteem."

An Eye to Business.

They helped him tenderly into the taxicab which had struck him and the chauffeur, taking his address, mounted to the seat.

Arrived at home, the driver helped him into the house.

"Thank you," the injured man remarked. "As it was not a serious affair, we'll let it drop. Probably I was—"

"There's a dollar-fifty due me," the chauffeur interrupted.

"A dollar-fifty? What for?" the other gasped.

"My register says it's a mile out here from where you put me. That's a dollar. An I always charge a half-dollar extra when I have to help a guy into the house!"—Lippincott's Magazine.

More Than She Knows.

"The last time I saw your husband he was trying to stop smoking. Has he stopped?"

"I don't know. You, of course, know that he is dead."

Who Can Beat Roosevelt?

Who is the best man to beat Roosevelt and a third term in 1912?

This is the question the Democrats of the country must face and they might as well meet it first as last. They have nothing to gain and much to lose by shutting their eyes to the facts that confront them.

We do not say that Mr. Roosevelt's nomination next year is inevitable. But it is probable. Luck is running with him and the advantage of position is on his side, thanks to Taft's mistakes and Roosevelt's adroit disloyalty.

Mr. Taft is politically dead, and there is little hope of a resurrection. He has succeeded in alienating both radicals and conservatives, both progressive and stand-patters. His candidacy is without popular support and is sustained only by the power of federal patronage. Scarcely one Republican in five believes that the President can be re-elected.

But it is not so. The President himself is doubtful. Opposing Mr. Taft for the nomination are the western insurgents; but outside of the country the Wisconsin senator is not a convincing appeal to the rank and file of the party. The east frankly distrusts him and the great debatable states of the middle west, like Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, display no enthusiasm for him.

If the issue of the nomination were to lie between Taft and La Follette, the latter would unquestionably win; but here Theodore Roosevelt enters the field. He still retains a large measure of his strength with the western insurgents. Most of the federal office-holders who are the backbone of the Taft machine, Republican appointees as well, are eager and anxious to hold their position. To them Taft's nomination means defeat and the loss of their jobs. Roosevelt is at least a fighting chance.

Big business is against Taft, but Roosevelt offers it a haven and a refuge, with the White House as a headquarters. His attack upon the Sherman act in Wall street's attack. He offers big business the kind of federal "supervision" it is begging for, but chiefly he offers the destruction of the Sherman act that Wall street is concentrating all its political power. If big business could be sure that his election would mean the repeal or amendment of that statute, all its money and influence and authority would be instantly arrayed on the side of his candidacy. In any event Wall street would not ignore him. Rather than Taft or La Follette it has bargained with him in the past and "now has to bargain with him in the future."

Big business might consider a hidebound conservative Democrat to be more desirable than Taft or La Follette or Roosevelt, but there is small chance of its obtaining such a candidate and less chance of electing him. Besides, Wall street has done business with the Republican party for many years and it naturally vies with associations with distrust. It prefers an old customer, and Mr. Roosevelt is its logical choice for president. He can cool the western radicals while insuring to big business the really important stakes for which it is playing.

Democrats in Congress and out of Congress cannot ignore this situation. They are no longer dealing with a frank, good-natured, tactless Taft. They are dealing with the most daring, audacious and practical political manipulator of his generation. They must prepare to beat Roosevelt.—New York World.

Charles Durham, Lovington, Ill., has succeeded in finding a positive cure for bed wetting. "My little boy wet the bed every night clear up to the floor. I have tried several kinds of kidney medicine and I was in the drug store looking for something different to help him when I learned of Foley's Kidney Pills. After he had taken them two days we could see a change and when he had taken two thirds of a bottle he was cured. That is about a week ago and he has not wet in bed since." Frankfort, Jan. 4.—War upon Auditors' agents, especially state revenue agents, will be made in the general assembly by the delegations from Louisville, Covington and Newport. A resolution will be introduced in the House to investigate the work of the revenue agents during the last administration. Auditors' worth of papers even the destruction of the force of tax-gathering sleuths, who have collected $400,000 for the state in four years. The odds are against the abolishment of the officers.

Frankfort, Jan. 4.—Kentucky is becoming a spendthrift. The state spent $399,059.53 more during 1911 than did during the preceding year. This was collected from all sources for Kentucky during last year $7,355,674.85, while there was collected in 1910 but $6,957,597.63. The year of 1911 ended with the state owing more than $800,000, so that the gay old daughter of the republic is no piker in her old age.

The Largest Grapevine.

Out in Carpentaria, Cal., is a grapevine that is said to be the largest in the world. This vine was planted in 1842 by a Spanish woman, and beneath its branches, which cover more than an acre, 800 or more persons can find protection from the sun's heat, says Popular Mechanics. The first clear crop of this vine was taken in Santa Barbara county under American rule was held under its ripening fruit. The vine is of the mission variety. In 1893 it bore eight tons of grapes, valued in 1895, ten tons. The trunk is nearly eight feet in circumference. It is difficult to determine how long the vine will grow. The Department of Agriculture declares that they have yet to find a grapevine which has died of old age. Some authorities state that the vine equals and often surpasses the oak in point of age. Pliny mentions a vine 600 years old. There is a vine at Hampton Court, England, that was planted in 1769, while here in America there is a wild grapevine on the shores of Mobile Bay, within a mile of Daphnusa, Ala., commonly known as the "Gen. Jackson vine," from the fact that Gen. Andrew Jackson twice pitched his tent and grew during his campaign against the Seminole Indians. This vine is more than six feet in circumference at its base.—Green's Fruit Grower.

William Jennings Bryan is going to have a good deal to say to who shall be the Democratic nominee for President. Some think too much.

The State officers and the Democratic members of the General Assembly were elected on the same platform, and all hands ought to pull together.

Numerous petitions for signatures are being circulated, asking Gov. McCreary to pardon Henry Youtsey, the only one of the "Goberl" conspirators who was brought to punishment.

President Taft ought to give a potato roast and invite ex-President Teddy. During the event they might come to an understanding in regard to the Republican nomination for President.

Clark and Folk will scrap for the Show Me State delegation in the National convention. The State is already considerably worked up over the situation which is rapidly approaching the acute stage.

Each member of the General Assembly should secure a printed copy of the platform adopted by the Democratic State convention, last year, and paste it on his desk, and read it from end to end every day before the session is opened.

The two leading detectives who worked in the McNamara dynamiting cases are engaged in a Perry-Cook square as to which is entitled to the honors growing out of the detective work that put the McNamara behind the prison bars.

The Taft element in the Republican party in Indiana are trying to make out State Chairman Lee a false prophet. A few weeks ago he announced that Indiana Republicans are opposed to the nomination of the President for reelection, and thereby stirred up a political hornet's nest in the Hoosier State.

The Recorder cut out the publishing of poetry twenty-five years ago. It was compelled to do so because the office had become flooded with that class of contributions, a very large number of which were horrible productions. It is occasionally a piece of poetry yet but has to decline its publication in order to avoid its experience of a quarter of a century ago.

Respect For Law.

Circuit Judge Kerr told the Fayette county grand jury the other day that within the past twelve months more homicide had been committed in Lexington and Fayette county than in London, the metropolis of England and the world's largest city.

Judge Kerr told the grand jury that all offenses against the law ought to be punished to the extent that it would teach violators of the law to respect the law. The large number of violations, he said, indicated that either the law is not good or that there is something radically wrong in the people in not having the courage and conviction to enforce the law.

These are strong assertions, but they are applicable in some measure to every section of Kentucky. There is no dearth of law in the statute books to deal with crime. There is scarcely any conceivable offense for which there is not some punishment adequate to its prosecution. It has been definitely established by statistics that the U. S. leads all the countries of the world in homicides. The press reports day by day that the State of Kentucky contributes its full share to this discreditable record.

What is the remedy? It would be hard to find a better one than is offered by Judge Kerr when he says that all offenses ought to be punished "so that it would teach violators of the law to respect the law." Good laws should be enforced and bad laws should be repealed, but all laws should be respected so long as they remain on the statute books. The one thing needful to bring about a whole respect for the law is its impartial enforcement all along the line from the largest offense to the least.—Courier-Journal.

New Plan.

Our railroads wear out 150,000 ties every year. They cost 50 cents apiece. They do not last but literally wear out. The spikes are constantly working loose, and constantly have to be driven back. Soon they cease to hold at all. Hence, the ties are being abandoned, and crews substituted for them. The screws hold four times as long, and by a new gasoline machine mounted on a hand car can be put in faster than the spike. The front end of the hand car carries two augers that bore holes in the ties, while the rear end carries two screw drivers that quickly drive the screws home. Four men move along the track, two inserting the augers and two inserting the gasoline motor does the work in a hurry. If the wood of the tie is soft, a large hole is bored, which is plugged with hard wood, into which later the screw is driven.

Horace Hewitt, the Aurora screw machine man, at Tusculum, Ky., was callers at this office yesterday. Mr. Hewitt was en route home from Waterloo neighborhood, having to go by the way of Cincinnati in order to get across the river with his company, the river being full of

The Governor's Message.

The message is well worth reading, and despite its length should be read, not only by every member of the General Assembly, but by all Kentuckians concerned in the welfare of their State. It furnishes most timely information on such matters as the educational institutions of the Commonwealth, the Geological Survey, the inspection of mines, the institutions for the insane, the feeble-minded and the deaf, the Board of Health and the militia.

The Governor makes many recommendations, including the fulfillment of all the pledges incorporated in the party platform. On which he was elected. These he summarizes in order, but aside from this summary he specifically recommends adequate appropriations for the State University and Normal School; legislation for the appointment of a curator of the Geological Department, with an office at Frankfort; the enactment of a direct primary election law; a bi-partisan Board of Prison Commissioners; a Department of Banking; a corrupt practice law; the reorganization of the Department of Agriculture; a Fish and Game Bureau; an Immigration Bureau; a State Forester; the submission of a constitutional amendment to the voters on the public roads; a Public Utilities Commission, and the re-districting of the State.

As long as this message, the Governor touches very briefly on the county unit question. This is how he deals with it: "So much has been spoken and written about extending the present local option law as applied to the sale of liquors so that the citizens of each and every county in the State may determine for themselves whether they will permit the sale of spirituous, vinous or malt liquors, or whether they will not do so, that I do not deem it necessary to discuss this important question at length. The State Democratic platform declared in favor of it long and unambiguously, and I have already, in my message, declared for it and for legislation to carry out the pledge. I want to say, however, with emphasis, that the question of regulating or suppressing the liquor traffic should be settled in each county without regard to other questions that may come before you, and wisdom, as well as harmony, demand that you should settle it and take it out of politics."

HIGH HONOR FOR JAMES.

May Serve as Temporary Chairman of Big Convention.

Washington, Jan. 4.—Ollie M. James, Kentucky's new senator and silver-tongued orator, probably will receive one of the most prestigious honors that can come to him during his life by being selected to serve as temporary chairman of the next Democratic national convention.

James will deliver the keynote speech in connection with the arrival of members of the national committee the sentiment as to the keynote speech will be in favor of Mr. James. At the Denver convention of 1908 he carried off first oratorical honors, and although he spoke at night when the delegates were weary, he brought applause that nearly tore the roof. The selection of Mr. James would be highly pleasing to W. J. Bryan, who has been still potential in Democratic circles.

July 2d probably will be selected as the date for the opening of the convention, and the nomination of a candidate for president will likely take place July 10. It is not known if Thomas Taggart of Indiana will be chairman of the committee to arrange for the convention. Kentucky, who is here, says the place for holding the convention is still in doubt. He indicated that the city that can offer the substantial inducement will remain a good chance to get the show, and further indicated that the committee is waiting to see the color of the wind before settling on a big talk but so far have not come across with anything tangible.

Let Loose too Soon.

It is said many thousands of dollars worth of warehouse receipts, representing the remaining 60 per cent. of the 1909 pooled crop, were bought up in this county at the sacrifice price of 13 per cent. This price included the ten per cent. stock in the Turkey Tobacco Company. The recent sale of 10,000,000 pounds to the American Tobacco Co. at 16 1/2 cents and the outlook favorable to disposing of the remaining 10,000,000 pounds at a big figure, may add between 30 and 40 per cent. more to the amount already received by growers. In such an event many holders of receipts who sold at 13c will lose all the way from $100 to $500 by disposing of the crop too soon.—Olive Tribune Democrat.

The Robertson Advocate, takes somebody to account as follows: "Tobacco growers will suffer considerable loss in selling their receipts; and it looks like some one or more high up in the B. T. affairs is responsible. They evidently pocketed some of Lexington's money sharks of the deal as receipts were being bought at this place for a man in Brooksville whom it is said was buying for Lexington people. The price they were paying was 13 cents on the dollar for the remainder of receipts which added to what they have received made 33 cents on the dollar." It does seem that there was a "Nigger in the woodpile."

Speaker Terrill's Address.

Upon taking the chair after having been elected Speaker of the House, Mr. Claude B. Terrill delivered the following neat but brief address. He said:

"The honor conferred upon me by the Democratic members of this House, the greatest that can be paid by this representative body, overwhelms me with the obligations it imposes. I am profoundly grateful to the Democrats for this expression of their confidence. They have rewarded me beyond my deserts. I realize that my election is not so much a personal tribute as it is the earnest expression of the Democratic majority that the will of the people of the State, as written in the Democratic platform and indorsed at the polls, shall be given force and effect in the work of this House."

"Believing that I was chosen to preside over the deliberations of this body because I am pledged to the support of every plank in the Democratic platform I want to renew here my allegiance to those principles of Democratic faith. I shall use every honorable means in my power to redeem the promises to which my party is sacredly pledged. The people have shown faith in us. They have taken up at our word because they believed that when the Democrats would be restored to power they would like honorable men, have regard both for the welfare of their party and their State and proceed at once to grant relief from the intolerable burden under which we have suffered."

"This duty rests upon the mind and conscience of every democrat in this House. We must meet it like men, openly and courageously, without fear or evasion."

"The record that this Legislature will write will determine the future of the Democratic party in this State, not only in the presidential election this fall, but in every political contest in which we may hereafter engage. If we prove worthy of the confidence that has been so generously bestowed upon us by the Democratic State for generations to come. The whole matter rests in our hands. It is a grave responsibility. I feel that our political enemies will be disappointed in their predictions and that we will prove by our work here that we are worthy in every respect to stand squarely on the people have reposed in us."

"We have a brave example in our Chief Magistrate, whose long record of honorable service has been crowned by the approval of a constituency which delights to reward him. He led us to a great victory because he had the courage to stand squarely on the Democratic platform. The voters showed their faith in his honesty and sincerity and it is a tower of strength to know that he will give us his support and that we will have the benefit of his wise, unselfish, patriotic counsel."

"Assuming the speakership I want to say that this House cannot conduct the affairs of this State without the dictation from any outside influence I will lay down the gravel and return the commission to your hands. I am going to be my own master. I intend to do my duty fearlessly under oath with no regard for the rights of every member on this floor no matter what his politics may be. I have no revenge to satisfy. I have no personal enemies to settle."

"I have only words of praise for my two opponents. They are men of high character and proved ability. True Democrats and worthy of the tributes paid them on this floor. I extend them the hand of friendship and feel assured that we will work together for the success of the party and the advancement of our beloved State."

"I am deeply sensible of the obligations my friends have placed me under it is not my purpose to punish any man who may have voted against me. Each of them had the right to choose. We are Democrats, no matter how wide apart our personal ambitions may take us and we should always be ready to meet the Democracy can only prosper when there is unity, kind treatment and fair play."

"I want to conduct myself as to earn and hold the respect and affection of every member of this House."

"The thinking you again for the honor you have bestowed upon me. We will now proceed to the business of the House."

Quite a delegation of the Recorder's colored friends called on it last Saturday afternoon, all being present at one time. Present were Martha Graves, Dinah Blue, and Messrs. Walker Gaines, Ward Coleman and Henry Webb.

Local Happenings.

The Recorder is authorized to announce Hon. Arthur B. Rouse as a candidate for nomination and reelection to Congress from this district subject to the action of the Democratic Congressional Primary election called for February 3, 1912.

Sleds and sleighs have run slick the past few days.

The frosts last week were on the growing wheat.

William Hughes, carrier on R. D. 4, went out in his sleigh, Tuesday.

The turnpikes were in fine condition last week—smooth as a floor.

John C. White, the Recorder's faithful Hathaway correspondent, was a caller at this office yesterday.

That Christmas money the sale of pooled tobacco was to furnish has not shown up. Maybe 1912 Christmas was meant.

Dr. M. J. Crouch, manager of the Boone County Consolidated Telephone Company is distributing his 1912 directory.

Atty. John L. Vest, of Walton, was in Burlington, last Friday filing a batch of suits out next term of the Boone Circuit Court.

Rev. W. H. Felix, many years ago a very prominent Baptist minister in this part of Kentucky, died at Clear Water, Fla., last Saturday.

The severe cold weather put two of the three Burlington heating plants out of commission, the one at the court house going through alright.

Mrs. Essie Jordan, daughter of A. J. Baker, several years ago a citizen of Burlington, has been elected a nurse in the tuberculosis department in a Nashville, Tennessee, hospital.

W. H. Rice, president, and J. S. Surface, director of Florence Deposit Bank, were attending to business in Burlington, last Friday. Each of these gentlemen appeared to be wintering in fine style.

The meeting being held by the Burlington Christian church closed last Friday night. Those who heard Rev. Runyan were delighted with the sermons. He made his points clear, and impressed his congregation with his earnestness.

NOTICE

It is rumored that I am to leave here immediately. I wish to say positively that I do not expect to leave here for at least two years, if then.

F. L. PEDDICORD.

At the State Corn Show at Lexington, last week, Stevens Bros., of Idlewild neighborhood, took premiums as follows: On ten ears yellow Dent, second. Single ear yellow Dent, first. One-half bushel yellow Dent, second.

John Meiman, of Devon, was in Burlington last Friday, and left an advertisement of a big sale of personal property on Wednesday, the 24th inst. Mr. Meiman expects to move to Florence or vicinity shortly after his sale, having sold the farm on which he now resides.

In this issue Sheriff B. E. Hume has a few lists of property advertised for sale for 1911 taxes. He has certainly collected up closely, which is very necessary to make anything out of the sheriff's office, the hardest office in the county to fill and the incumbent come out not broken.

The cold weather got here in earnest last Thursday night, and early risers hastened back to comfortable fires as soon as they consulted their thermometers. Friday night the thermometers went to zero in Burlington, while at some points in the county it was ten below. Everything got a good cooling out, and some nice ice resulted.

W. E. Popham, of Erlanger, sends the Recorder the following weather statistics for the year 1911: It snowed on 34 different days; depth of all snows, 24 inches; rainy days 160, depth of water fall, 53 inches; coldest day, January 24, degrees; coldest day, winter weather—first week in July, average temperature for that week 72 degrees in morning.

Albert Conner, the local tobacco dealer, has been buying of the 1911 crop, paying as high as ten dollars for some, which is not so bad, when only a few months ago it was predicted that the price paid for the 1911 crop would be unsatisfactory to the growers. The quality of the crop is better, decidedly, than was thought possible when it was being put in the house.

The supervisors of tax completed their work about 10 o'clock last Saturday morning and left immediately for their homes, but will meet again on the 17th inst., to hear from those whose property's assessed value they increased. They gave Assessor Willis work a thorough going over and the very few changes they made shows how well and carefully he performed the duties of his office which is a very important one.

OSCAR GAINES

After a Brief Illness of Pneumonia Passes Away.

After a brief illness of pneumonia Mr. Oscar Gaines died at his home two miles north of Burlington, last Saturday at 5 p. m.

Mr. Gaines was born March 19th, 1831, consequently he would have been 81 years old on the 19th day of next March. He was a son of William Gaines, a pioneer citizen and by his death the last of his generation in this county has passed from earthly scenes.

Mr. Gaines' wife was Miss Aletha Utz, daughter of the late Jonas Utz. She has been dead several years. Mr. Gaines is survived by five children, William, Wilson and Charles A. and Miss Anna and Lucy, only one of whom Charles A. is married. These five children and loving children were with their father in his last moments and are sorely grieved by reason of his death.

Oscar Gaines had been prominent in county affairs ever since a long period many years ago as a justice of the peace under the old constitution. He watched the interests of the county closely, and while not parsimonious in the use of the public's money for the benefit of the county, yet he advocated proper economy in all matters pertaining to expenditure of the money collected from the people for defraying county expenses.

When the Grange was first instituted in this county, believing in the principles advocated by that order, Mr. Gaines was among the first to become a member, and he took a prominent part in its affairs until within the last year or two, when his health became so feeble he could not attend its meetings regularly.

He was a Bible student and understood that sacred volume to teach the intimate salvation of all mankind, consequently he was an ardent Universalist, and an active member of that congregation so long as it maintained its church in Burlington, to which he gave liberally of both his time and means to support. Always ready and able to defend his religious opinions he was never known to show other than a christian spirit toward those who disagreed with him in the matter of religion, and would present his views when discussing scripture in a kind and christian spirit.

Very little of his long life did Mr. Gaines spend elsewhere than in this his native county, where he established a reputation that would be an honor to any man. He was honest and conscientious in all his dealings with his fellowmen, his word was as good as his bond, and as a good neighbor he had few equals and none excelled him. He was kind to his family, a good provider, and sustained a home where genuine Kentucky hospitality prevailed under all conditions.

Being of a retiring disposition it required an intimate acquaintance with Mr. Gaines to appreciate his many good attributes and his information pertaining to the leading topics of the day.

After a funeral discourse by Rev. Bersford, Universalist, at the Hebron church, at 10 a. m., last Tuesday, the remains were interred on the family lot in the Hebron cemetery, quite a large group of friends and relatives being present to pay their last respects to one whom they loved, esteemed and honored in life.

Turned Out In The Cold.

About nine o'clock last Sunday night the house occupied by Ward Coleman, colored, and family in Burlington, was destroyed by fire. Coleman and his family were turned out in the cold. The contents among which was a week's washing belonging to Mrs. Emma Brown, Coleman's wife and three children were attending colored church at the time, while he and the other two were at home and had retired for the night, when the fire was discovered. Card of Thanks.

We want to try to thank the good people who were so kind in helping us with our house. No one will ever know how much we appreciated their kindness. They were not satisfied with helping us but they began the new year by bringing a great many useful things to replace those we lost. Mrs. O. W. Gaines took good care of my mother while we built, and Mr. T. F. Grant and wife's home was ours.

Wimberly-Foster Marriage.

The following account of the wedding of Miss Olivette Foster is copied from a Jacksonville, Fla., paper. The bride has many relatives and friends in this county, who wish for her and her husband all the prosperity and happiness this life affords. The wedding occurred on December 31st, that being the birthday of both the bride and her grandmother, Mrs. M. A. Foster, and the anniversary of the day she united with the Christian church.

Wimberly-Foster. Yesterday morning at 7:30 o'clock Miss Olivette Foster was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Andrew Lee Wimberly, the Rev. J. T. Boone, pastor of the First Christian church officiating.

The wedding which was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Kirby Foster in Springfield, was exceedingly quiet, only the relatives and intimate friends of the contracting parties being present.

The bride, a pretty blonde, was never lovelier than in her bridal gown of white lace elaborately trimmed with lace. She carried a beautiful bouquet of bride-roses.

After the impressive ceremony, the happy couple received the best wishes of their many friends. The bride then donned her traveling costume, a stylish coat suit of royal purple cloth with hat to match.

The happy couple left yesterday morning on a brief wedding trip, after which they will be at home to their friends at 2131 Main street.

The bride has a host of friends here and throughout the state who will be interested to learn of her marriage.

The groom is connected with the Georgia Southern and Florida railroad and is to be congratulated on winning so charming a bride.

The many friends of the contracting parties extend best wishes for their future happiness and prosperity.

Those who attended the wedding were Mrs. M. C. Jordan, Miss Mamie Jordan, Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Wimberly, Mr. Will Wimberly, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Zaring, Mr. and Mrs. Griffin, Mrs. Singer, Miss Mary Singer, Mr. H. A. Gardner.

OHIO RIVER WATER

Dangerous to Health Unless Properly Filtered, Says Indiana's Official Chemist.

Washington.—Dr. H. E. Barnard, State Chemist of Indiana, who is here in attendance upon the meeting of the American Chemists' Association, to-day submitted to that body a synopsis of the report which he made of his investigations of the waters of the Ohio River. These findings were such as to recommend the river water highly as a beverage.

Dr. Barnard and a committee of health experts representing the state of Indiana went to Cincinnati last summer and there boarded a houseboat and drifted down the river as far as Evansville, Ind. At various places they took samples of the water, and when they returned to Indianapolis tests were made of them.

The showing was not favorable, but it was demonstrated, Dr. Barnard said, that the river is full of typhus germs and that the water is not fit for drinking purposes unless it is filtered. It has become the custom for the cities and towns along the river to dump their sewage into the stream and this contaminates the water and makes it injurious to health.

He declared that the small towns along the river, which use the water without filtering it, are exposed to typhoid and kindred diseases and that the death rate in them is notably higher than in towns which have properly equipped filters. The conclusion of the State Chemist was that the river water should never be used for drinking purposes until it is first filtered.

OVERDRAFTS.

Lexington.—In accordance with a hint conveyed in a circular issued by Lawrence O. Murray, U. S. Controller of the Currency, which was brought to their attention by National Bank Examiner Percy H. Johnson, the Lexington Clearing House Association has adopted resolutions declaring that no more overdrafts shall be permitted by the banks of this city after March 1, 1912. All credits which have heretofore been made in the shape of overdrafts are to be in the form of direct loans by the banks in future. It is estimated the overdrafts in Lexington have an usual aggregate more than $200,000, and in all the national banks of the United States the overdrafts have for the last five years amounted to more than $35,000,000 each year.

A recent decision of the United States Supreme Court holds that an overdraft is given on the cashier's own responsibility, and at the peril of himself and his associates. The clause on this subject in Controller Murray's circular is as follows:

"To enable to allow customers to overdraft, and to have their checks and notes charged up, without present funds in the bank—stripped of all technical disguise, and hence the practice thus attempted to be sanctioned, is a usage and practice to misapply the funds of the bank; and to connive at the withdrawal of the same without any security in favor of certain privileged persons. Such a usage and practice is hereby manifest departure from the duty, both of the directors and cashier, as cannot receive any countenance in a court of justice. It could not be supported by any vote of the directors, however formal; and therefore, whenever done by the cashier, is at his own peril, and the suretyship of himself upon his sureties. It is anything but 'well and truly executing his duties as cashier.'"

Grateful For Past Favors.

A South Carolina man who has been visiting in Kentucky, writes a letter to the Bowling Green Messenger to thank his Kentucky friends for their hospitality. Among the varied enjoyments he recounts are horseback riding, fox hunting, turkey dinners, and last, but by no means least, hog killings.

Small wonder that after such a round of gaiety the South Carolinian should have taken his pen in hand to say that he finds the people of Kentucky "the best people in the world," especially those in Alvin. Rural life in Kentucky is particularly attractive at this season of turkey dinners and hog killings, and to those who love the glad free life of the country fox hunts and horseback rides are events of unalloyed pleasure. The South Carolina man is to be congratulated that he was "the recipient of much social attention" and that his capacity for enjoyment was such that he has encountered all these varied entertainments and attractions and has reached home healthy, and is able to write a note of gratitude which is without shadow of remorse or regret—to thank my friends for the good time given me.

In the face of such sincere personal assurances it is evident that the citizens of Alvin have fully upheld the standard of Kentucky hospitality, and that the pleasure is mutual. If the Alvin correspondent of the Messenger has failed to chronicle the fact that "an enjoyable time was had" it is merely because such a statement is superfluous in view of the communication from South Carolina. Neither is it necessary for the aforesaid Alvin correspondent to say "come again, Sam," for Sam himself has supplied indubitable evidence that he will come back at the first possible opportunity. —Lexington Journal.

Voters Slow to Learn.

Kentucky has had the Australian ballot system so long that there are thousands of voters whose memory does not reach back to days when suffrage was exercised by the viva voce method. Nevertheless every recurring election shows that there are some thousands of electors who have not mastered the intricacies of the ballot.

In the recent State election the head of the Democratic ticket polled more than 5,000 votes in excess of the minor candidates on the same ticket. The Republican candidate for Governor polled any where from 4,500 to 4,800 votes more than were cast for his several running mates on the party ticket. This is due principally to the fact that many voters do not heed the advice of the politicians and the political organs to "stamp under the rooster's feet," or "under the log cabin," as the case may be, but apply the stencil opposite the name of the first candidate on the ticket and retire from the booth with a clear conscience as to the performance of a high civic duty. Manifestly many of these voters mean to support the straight ticket, but simply do not understand the process despite the multitudinous instructions and innumerable object lessons that are given in every campaign.

The ballots in State elections are cumbersome. More especially is this the case when there are district or local contests, or when there are general or local propositions to be submitted to the voters. It is not surprising that many voters become confused in the presence of a great array of names. The man who is disposed to "scratch" is likely to experience no little difficulty in the operation, but voting should be a comparatively simple matter for the elector who always supports the straight ticket. Election figures show, however, that there is great lack of understanding, even in the simplest features of the Australian ballot. The popular ignorance and indifference on the subject and the growing size of the ballots present two of the strongest arguments that are offered by those who are advocating the short ballot.

A Twelve Foot Skeleton.

A Hardin county farmer has dug up a skeleton which measures 12 feet. The find was made at the foot of a cliff which evidently had been the burial ground of a prehistoric race, as numerous other skeletons were found, most of them being of gigantic proportions. Such places of sepulchre are not uncommon in Kentucky and they are supposed to date back a matter of 2,000 years. It is evident that "there were giants in those days," but the people now on earth do not know or care much about them.

Our predecessors whose gargantuan frames have been sleeping the sleep of centuries did not leave us any history of themselves. Facilities for making records of current events were not good in this country a couple of thousand years ago. If the giants left any notations on the cliffs or elsewhere they have been obliterated by "time in his flight." More than likely they didn't leave any. They led the simple life and probably knew no reason why any one should bother himself about reading and writing, and hence they left behind a surplusage of clothing. They had no telephones, telegraphs or rural free delivery routes. When they had messages to exchange they sent word, lacking to many of the modern conveniences it was fortunate that folks grew tall. They were built for long stepping and many have been able to cover territory at an amazing rate; but life was not the fevered rush in that far-away time that it is at present and probably the only occasions that called for hurry were when the family larder was empty and it was necessary to run down an elephant to secure a stock of meat, or when it was prudent to put on a little speed to escape from an angry mastodon or something of the sort.

In the days when men were twelve feet tall and built accordingly, there must have been fish and serpents as large as whales and enough to reach from Louisville to West Point. Probably the geologists would not concede the existence of that dipodomys at a recent period, but there must have been many strange and immense animals to make it interesting and amusing and, at times, exciting for our large and lofty predecessors. Also these prehistoric Kentuckians had to eat, and knowing nothing about scientific farming, they were obliged to be carnivorous, and, of course, big game was in demand. They had few cooking vessels and in all ways lived close to nature. Whether they dwelt in caves or rooted in trees is not material. We may well imagine they believed and practiced the fresh air theory, since they lacked means and ways of polluting the ozone or of steaming up their crude comicalities. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why they grew tall and sun-crowned and were able to leap across Rolling Fork without taking a running start.

Kentucky has always produced a superior class of citizens. The discoveries of the Hardin county farmer supply valuable evidence to the effect that the soil acquired the hot early and never has gotten out of it. Whatever the present generations lack in length, breadth and thickness, it is compensated for in the quality of the fiber. In the readjustment of things that has taken place in the past 2,000 years the giants had to go along with the mammoth—and the mastodon—simply because Consolidation of Packet Lines.

There is a report out to the effect that there are definite negotiations underway in Pittsburgh for the consolidation of Ohio river packet lines, contemplating a $1,000,000 investment. The lines expected to be taken into the consolidation are the Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, Kanawha, Monongahela and Ohio and Zanesville and Ohio. The first two mentioned connect Pittsburgh and Cincinnati.

The main benefits of the proposed consolidation, which has been talked for several years, would be the reduction of cost of handling and wharfage and establishment of a uniform rate schedule, according to E. R. Mauck, Cincinnati agent for the Pittsburgh and Cincinnati company. —Lawrenceburg Press.

This year's straw hat will cost more than last year's, and the price will be still higher in 1913, owing to a shortage in the importation of straw braid, most of which comes from the province of Shantung, in China. Word reached the New York importers this week that millions of rolls of this straw have been seized and burned by the Chinese rebels. This means, it is said that this year the importation of straw from China will be practically nil, and there will be nothing to manufacture the straw hat of 1913 from except paper mache.

LAST APPEARANCE OF RACHEL

Death of Great French Actress Due to Brother's Master Stroke of Economy.

The greatest tragic actress that France ever produced was Rachel. Her last appearance in New York was on November 17, 1885, at Tripler hall, as Phedre in "Le Moineau de Lesbie."

"While playing at the Walnut Street theater, Philadelphia, an incident occurred that was the cause of her death. It was an extremely cold night, and between the acts Rachel, instead of going to her dressing-room or green room, where a fire rendered it pleasant and comfortable, sat beside a small table placed near the prompter's seat. On the table she had placed several wax candles, the book of the play and some papers. There in the extreme cold, with but a slight covering, sat this fragile, classic form, the cold air rushing down around and about her, chilling with its icy influence even those who were seated in the parquet. Rachel felt the cold, and she thought it probably a master stroke of economy to suppress the furnace fires, or possibly he did not trouble his head about them. But Rachel's death the next morning, with gasping, pneumonia, and Rachel's saving in fuel resulted in the untimely death of his great sister. Rachel sailed for Charleston, S. C., where she was able to give one performance, December 17, 1885, and it was her last appearance on any stage. She died at the residence of her brother, M. L. S. G. Lecocq, from pneumonia. From Charleston she went with her company to Havana, expecting she would be well enough to act, but she never did. Day by day she grew weaker, until at last, finding that it was useless to prolong the struggle, she returned to Europe, took up her abode at the Villa Sarden, at Cannes, France, where she died, almost alone, January 5, 1888."

DON'T KNOW OWN SLANG

Mack the Mick Returns Highly Disgusted With His Experience Among the Britishers.

"Chee," said Mack the Mick, as he disembarked from the second cabin gangway of the Lusitania, "dem Britishers dunno deir own slang. No dey don't. Straight!"

"I took in deir law courts one day in Lunnun. Chee! dey didn't know what a toff was dere. Toff—deir own slang, mind ye—and dey didn't know it! Straight! Chee!"

"A custer—dat's a bucker—he sez, ses he, dat a guy wot he'd swiped was a toff."

"Wot's a toff?" says his nibs, de head jedge.

"A toff," says a lawyer, "is a guy wot wears fine cloze, yer honor. But, yer honor, a real toff is a gent, a genuine gent."

"Why, I t'ought," says another lawyer, "dat a toff was a bloke wot wore an eyeglass."

"Den de head jedge he dropped his own eyeglass outta his eye and he sez:

"O' course, dough dere's many well-known exceptions to de rule."

"Den dey all laughed, but few de coop disgusted."

"Lawyers!" says I to meself. "And dey dunno deir own slangage!"

Leaders at Harvard.

There was at one time a popular belief—It never had much foundation—that undergraduate affairs in Harvard college were directed and controlled by the men who came from Boston.

Whatever may have been the facts in years gone by, a glance at the list of officers elected from time to time by the present undergraduates will show that the Boston men have no monopoly of the positions of trust and responsibility.

The members of the sophomore class elected their officers the other day. They chose for vice-president a man from Portland, Ore., and their secretary-treasurer claims Buffalo for his home. The president of the junior class is registered from Denver, Colo., the vice-president from New York, and the secretary-treasurer from Santa Barbara, Cal.

The student council, which is the leading undergraduate organization, has elected as president H. L. Gladie of McCune, Kansas, and one member of the executive committee came from Chicago, another from Saco, Me., and a third from Honolulu.—Harvard Alumni Bulletin.

Height of Humility.

Senator La Follette, at a dinner in Madison, said of a certain notorious trust: "That trust's Thanksgiving won't be this year so boisterous and blatant as it used to be. That trust has certainly become subdued. Its spirit is as humble now as that of a very ugly man who visited a matrimonial agency and said he'd like to find a wife. But the agent, looking the man over, returned sternly: 'I'm afraid it won't be easy to find a wife for you, my friend.'"

"I t'ought," said the applicant, "you might have something short-sighted on your books."

Best Cultivation Spreading.

Best cultivation has been raised from a production of 1,000 tons in 1885 to more than 600,000 tons in 1910. There is so much beet-sugar territory in this country that if only one acre in fifty were planted with beets once every four years the entire United States demand for sugar could be supplied.

CALLS FOR WILD ANIMALS

Indians Are Very Skillful in Attracting Game by Imitating Their Calls.

The Indians have a call or tole for nearly every animal. Mr. John G. Mills in "Newfoundland and Its Untrodden Ways." They can bring a fox right up to within twenty yards by making a shrill noise produced by sucking the back of the hand. Raynard takes it to be the cry of a mouse in difficulties, and seldom fails to advance close to the sound.

Stag caribou are toled by grunting loudly in two different ways, a vocal effort which requires little skill or practice on the imitator's part. The "hard" stag will quickly answer the caller, and advance for a short distance, but the "felling" stag will come very close if the calls are properly made at suitable intervals.

Wild geese can be called when they first arrive in the spring, by waving a white rag and imitating their "honking" call, but after the first fortnight they take little notice of the lure. A small white dog is also attractive to geese in the spring, and one Indian I know of has killed numbers of these birds by using one for a decoy.

Beavers, when they have been undisturbed for long, are very curious in relation to strange sounds. They will come swimming out of their house even at the firing of a gun. The Indians usually call them with a hissing noise, or one produced by munching in the lips. Another favorite tole is a sound made by tapping the trousers with the hand. The most successful beaver-caller in Newfoundland killed great numbers of beavers, in the open season, by making a sound that resembled the cutting of chips off a tree. It is said that the unfortunate beavers never fail to respond to this noise.

The Indian has no call for the lynx, but one or two of them can attract the other by imitating its shrill whistle.—Youth's Companion.

HE HAD TO STRIKE OR BUST

Colored Man Was Afraid White Folks Would Think He Was Just Common Trash.

"I keep a colored man around the house who washes the table and does various things," said the lawyer.

"Up to a year ago he was getting $25 a month. Then he came to me one day and said he must have more money or he would strike. We talked it over, and settled on $28 a month. He has got along at that figure ever since until the other day, when he walked in on me and said:

"'Mistah Blank, I see sure got to go on strike dis time.'"

"But I thought you were satisfied, Robert," I replied.

"No, sah, no, sah. I hain't dun satisfied."

"Well, how much do you want?"

"I don't want any mo', sah."

"Then's what's the trouble?"

"De trouble am, sah, dat de strike business am in de air all 'round me, an' I's got to strike or bust."

"Are you going to leave?"

"No."

"But you want more money?"

"No, sah."

"Well, what then?"

"A year ago, sah, I struck ford's fur $28. Now I see gwine to strike back ward fur de same $28. Sorry, sah, but I must dun strike or dese white folks 'round yere will think I'm jes common trash and hev no respect for me!"—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

A Canine Negotiator.

An amusing story concerning the Morocco negotiations is going the rounds of the French press. Herr von Kiderlen-Waechter possesses a beautiful dog of the boarhound type. The dog and his master are inseparable. One day, in fact, they were reminded of Wordsworth's "Two Thieves" for their attachment. The dog takes part in the negotiations lying at the feet of his master and for the most part motionless. But in the course of the conversation sometimes the French diplomat unconsciously raises his voice. Then a low growl from the dog leads M. Cambon to modulate his voice. When von Kiderlen-Waechter had to visit the kaiser on board his yacht at Kiel some time ago the dog, more suo, accompanied him. The two friends a the port seemed likely to suffer a abort separation, but the kaiser saw what was going on between the statesman and harbor official, and solved the difficulty, offering: "When two brothers come to see me I cannot do otherwise than receive them together."

Beyond Understanding.

A young man just returned from college was out cycling one day when suddenly he came to a steep gradient. While he was descending he lost control of his machine and was thrown. Two men came and found him lying on the ground. When asked how it happened he replied:

"Well, I came down that decline with the greatest velocity and lost my central gravity and was precipitated on the hard macadamized road."

"Away, lad; let him alone," replied one of the men. "He's a foreigner."

Vigorous Performer.

"Does your boy Josh play on the football team?"

"No, replied Farmer Cornelius. 'Josh wouldn't stand fur no mollycoddle job like that. He's the feller that leads the mob and wrecks oyer houses after the game is over.'"

FUTURE OF MOVING PICTURES

Edison Tells of the Possibilities in This Field That Soon May Be Developed.

An interview with Thomas A. Edison in the New York Dramatic Mirror quotes the great inventor as saying that the future of the motion picture is almost unlimited. He calls attention to the obvious educational value of pictures in connection with work in the elementary schools such as the teaching of history, geography and literature. He is sure that the future of the motion pictures in the amusement world is a great one and he concludes the subject with the following comment upon the development of moving pictures in regard to the work of the great actors:

"That will be only another development of the art. At the present time the works of the greatest singers are indelibly recorded in phonograph and talking machine records and will be capable of reproduction for centuries to come. These records make it possible for all music lovers to enjoy good music. They will undoubtedly cultivate a higher musical taste in this country. The same thing is true of the motion picture, and especially when it is effectively combined with the phonograph. The great actors and actresses are able in their short lives to reach only a fraction of the public. If their gestures and words are recorded by moving pictures and the phonograph, they can be seen, heard and appreciated by every man, woman and child in the country, not only now, but for 100 years to come."

IS BEST OF BURGLAR ALARMS

Man Refused to Sign Lease Until He Learned Neighbor Was Taking Fresh Air Cure.

Every reader has his own idea of what constitutes a desirable neighborhood," said the renting agent. "A tenant hung back from signing a lease for six hours the other day because I could not tell him whether anybody in the block was taking the fresh air cure. He was so insistent that I finally made inquiry and learned from the janitor at No. 225 that a man on the third floor of his building sleeps every night with his head stuck out of the window and then the tenant signed the lease."

"His precaution was due to fear of burglars. He has learned, he says, that the best burglar alarm ever invented is the fresh-air cure. Not even the doctors who advise it know so well as the second-story men how many people sleep with their heads out of the window. They know because the habit interferes with their business. Whole blocks that used to be profitable hunting grounds for burglars are now so much waste space because two or three persons in the block go to bed with the upper half of the body protruding beyond the window sill. Outdoor sleepers may sleep comfortably, but they sleep lightly. The second-story man can not make a noise half a block away without waking them and giving the alarm."

Not the Odor of Araby.

Theodore P. Shonts at a dinner at the Chicago club, praised the ventilation of New York's tubes. "Our tubes," he said, "smell as sweet, almost, as a clover field in June. But I wish you could smell the underground railways of London, especially those railways that haven't been cleaned 'trified.'" Mr. Shonts' beaming smile was evidence of the fact that an appropriate story had come into his mind. "Two spirits clad in winding sheets," he said, "advanced with slow, shrinking steps toward a portal over which were inscribed the words, 'All hope abandon, ye who enter here.' From this portal belched vast volumes of foul black smoke. The first spirit, as he neared the dreadful gateway, sniffed. 'My word!' he said. 'It smells like the blawsted tuppenny tube!'—Oh, not so bad as that," said the second spirit."

A Reasonable Request.

"Sit down!" exclaimed the man of few inches.

"The man of many took no notice."

"Sit down!" repeated the little man again. "I can't see anything!"

But still the giant paid no heed, and the little man could only hear the tantalizing sounds of feet and carriage wheels as the procession passed along.

"Will—you—sit—down!" he cried, for the third time. "I've paid two guineas for this seat and you're blotting every blessed thing from view!"

"Well, if you won't sit down," roared the little man, thumping the giant on his massive back, "will you at least oblige me by tying your ears back!"

Feathered Quadruped.

L. J. Davis of Sedwick has a freak chicken that he is raising this summer, says the Kansas City Journal. It has four legs. Three of the "dumsticks" are on one side. The other leg is like any well-regulated chicken ought to have. Mr. Davis says he hopes to raise the chicken and perfect a new breed. He says the man who makes two blades of grass grow where only one grew before is considered a public benefactor, and if he can succeed in making four "dumsticks" grow where only two ordinarily sprout he will be somewhat of a philanthropist himself.

NOVEL FRAUD ON A JEWELER

How a Clever French Swindler Obtained Jewels, Paying for Them With Trade-men's Own Money.

A novel method of defrauding a jeweler was successfully carried out by a Paris thief. He drove up in a carriage to the jeweler's shop with his right arm in a sling, and was ostentatiously attended by a footman carrying a rug. He selected jewels to the value of $1,000, and when the moment came for payment asked whether the jeweler minded him sending his man home for the money.

No objection was made to this course, and then there was another request.

"Would you mind writing for me?" said the customer. "I have hurt my arm. Just write, 'Please give Robert $1,000,' and sign it 'Henri.'"

The jeweler wrote the note and in 15 minutes Robert was back with the cash.

When the jeweler went home a light dawned.

"What," his wife asked, "did you want that $1,000 for?"

The thief had made the jeweler, whose name was Henri, pay for the gems with his own money.

Foley's Honey and Tar Compound Cures in Every Case.

Mr. Jas. McCaffery, Mgr. of the Schiller Hotel, Omaha, Neb., recommends Foley's Honey and Tar Compound, because it cures in every case. "I have used it myself and I have recommended it to many others who have since told me of its great curative power in diseases of the throat and lungs." For all coughs and colds it is speedily effective. For sale at Jones' drug store, Walton.

Senator LaFollette, of Wisconsin, who is an insurgent Republican candidate for president, made several speeches in Ohio last week that put on edge both factions of the Republican party in the Buckeye State. The insurgent of the President Taft's State at this time by a northwestern insurgent is regarded by the Taft followers as extremely checky and from the antics they are cutting it is evident they fear the harvest that will result from the seed sown.

If the Kentucky Legislature sits and adjourns without passing good tax laws and road laws the Republican party will be given enough ammunition to shoot its way out under the snow that obliterated fences, buildings and small trees in November.—C.-J.

Is Hospitality Growing Extinct?

Not long ago we recorded the painful fact that a mother-in-law joke had been barred from a Boston theater. A New York judge has gone farther and taken steps toward the elimination of the lady herself from the homes of her married children. A late judicial opinion fixes ten days as the proper limit for a mother-in-law's visit. Henceforth in the metropolis mothers-in-law overstaying the ten-days' limit do so at their own risk.

Hospitality is achieving new low records almost every day. One paper is bewailing the passing of the spare room, the time-honored symbol of hospitality. The stingy city flat has rung the death knell of the guest room; the flat-dweller finds it hard enough to find room for the family. He once has discovered that the old sociable Saturday night has passed away. A society-column conductor sheds a tear over the passing of the formal call; automobiles and bridge whist have wrought its downfall. And now the ban on mothers-in-law! Is social intercourse of the future to be limited to the telephone and the picture postcard?—Success.

Paper Made by Wasps.

Wasps are wonderful papermakers, they make real paper, too, just as truly as human papermakers.

A wasp flies to a flower and covers the front of its body with the dust of the blossom. This is moistened and mixed with the wax which is secreted on the surface of the wasp's body. Then the insect repairs to an old fence or other piece of weather worn wood that has a loose, fuzzy, fibrous surface.

The wasp rubs itself on this fibrous matter just as it did on the dust of the flower, and a layer of such matter adheres to the insect's body and becomes mingled with wax in the same way.

Then away goes the wasp to the nest which it is building places itself just on the spot where it wants the layer of paper to lie and then works itself into a heat by a furious motion of the wings, so that the wax is moistened next to the body, when the paper drops off in the right place, where it may be adjusted properly and fastened.

The paper of the wasp is as good as the product of the paper mill.

The presidential election will be held this year.

GREATEST MEDICINE ON EARTH

A prominent citizen of Evansville, Ind., writes:—"I was ill for five months with a pulmonary trouble, and had the best of doctors. I had hemorrhages and was in a very bad way. I have advised others to try Vinol, and they have had the same results." (Name furnished on request.)

We want every one in this vicinity, who is troubled with chronic colds, coughs, or pulmonary troubles, to come and get a bottle of Vinol. Hon. G. E. Carroll returned home here from Frankfort last Thursday and remained with his family until Monday. He is well pleased with his position in the legislature and made Boone county a faithful representative.

W. M. Hudson, of Independence, Deputy Sheriff of Kenton county, was here Saturday on official business. He also spent a couple of days at the bedside of his venerable mother who has been very ill but is now much better.

Dr. C. C. Metcalf spent Saturday in Cincinnati having a special examination made of his leg which was broken some years ago, and the injury has been giving him considerable trouble lately, having to use a crutch a part of the time.

Dr. and Mrs. D. M. Bagby were made happy during the holidays by the receipt of an express package from El Paso, Texas, containing nicely framed pictures of their handsome grandsons, the Atwood boys, and the Doctor's face is still beaming with delight.

H. T. Larimore of the Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Company, spent a part of last week here looking at the tobacco crop, he having a purchase made here in the name of Noah Glasscock & Co., with G. W. Murphy in charge of the warehouse.

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Northcutt left last Friday for Terre Haute, Ind., and from there they will go to Hot Springs, Arkansas, where they expect to stay several weeks recuperating their health. Mr. Northcutt has been greatly confined by his merchandise business and was much in need of a rest as he was bordering on a collapse.

Prof. and Mrs. J. G. Frather entertained the teachers of the Walton High School last evening with a six o'clock dinner, the guests being B. L. Vallandigham, the assistant principal, Misses Anna Chambers, and Helen Dickey. A very pleasant evening was spent together and a delightful repeat enjoyed.

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Northcutt entertained Sunday Dec. 30th, with a magnificent one o'clock dinner in honor of their 25th wedding anniversary. The affair was a surprise to the guests and they in turn surprised Mr. and Mrs. Northcutt with the presentation of a handsome silver baking dish. The guests were: Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Vest, Rev. and Mrs. Clifford Wayman, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. H. Poor, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse E. Franks, Dr. and Mrs. D. M. Bagby, Mrs. Sarah Green, and Mrs. Rich. of Walton, Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Loomis and Miss Wilmet of Independence.

Walton Lodge No. 106, Knights of Pythias, had a fine meeting last Thursday night when the officers of the lodge for the current term were duly installed, and the Rank of Esquire was conferred on Roy D. Stamler. Following which the members and friends were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Stamler with a splendid supper prepared for the occasion by Mrs. Stamler, the balance of the evening being spent in social enjoyment, interspersed with music and other pleasing features until a late hour. The lodge is in fine working condition and has the promise of work and increased membership for some time to come.

Last Wednesday evening some of the kindred spirits who enjoy a pleasant evening together assembled at the Walton opera house and had the pleasure of a "Smoker" under the auspices of the Walton Commercial Club which is in process of organization.

Mrs. W. C. Moxie very kindly arranged the edibles, consisting of oysters, omelets, pickles, relishes, crackers, coffee, all prepared in a most appetizing manner, and the guests exhibited their appreciation by the hearty appetites and a wonderful dispatch of the good things. After the refreshments fine cigars were passed and the balance of the evening was spent in recounting valorous deeds of the past and telling of ambitious desires for the future.

The party was a most enjoyable, companionable crowd and everybody had a good time. Those present were S. W. Beavary, Everett E. McHenry, Ed. Egan, W. D. Stabler, Stet West, T. W. West, Thos. Percival, Bruce Geo. W. Maline, Tilden Like the "Show Me" State.

Liberty, Mo., Jan. 30, 1912.
Editor Recorder:
I am not asking too much of you if I would like to have the privilege of saying just a few words to the people at home. When I say home I mean the people of Boone county, who shall always seem very dear to me and I shall always be interested in the people of that county. I am better prepared for a greater and better work in life, by attending William Jewell College which I think a grand school for young men and I feel sure I made no mistake in coming to Missouri as the greater part of the people in this community are Kentuckians, which I think are the best people in the world.

The state is well represented this year in school, and I think thirty-four from the state who are united and form what is known as the Kentucky club which is the largest club in school. I met without Kentucky Mo. would be a failure, although some of our boys say Kentucky is a good place to be born but not a good place to live. I think one born in Boone county could not make such a remark. I did not know that the Recorder was another good paper till I left the state. We find it one has known the people in that county he is not satisfied without reading that great paper. While an am not on the paper I read the paper just the same. When I get lonely some and want to know what is going on at home I call on my country club. I was once a citizen of Boone county. Tho he has been in Missouri many years he loves to talk of the days spent in that state. He is a subscriber of the Recorder and I enjoy reading and talking with him. I hope it will be as I can read the Recorder. This school year has been more pleasant to me for I am now better acquainted with another new year after a week's vacation. I spent in Kansas, where I enjoyed myself fine visiting my room-mate Mr. Boerster. We landed in a little town called Chouteau in Neosho county on the Neosho River, walking across the prairie five miles to Mr. Boerster's home. Kansas is a beautiful state in that part. No hills to climb. A fellow can look as far as he wants to without seeing a hill and where the wind blows it strikes a fellow on all four corners. In summer the old farmer on his dugout stands and sings Kansas, sweet Kansas land, and as he looks across the plain he wonders if it will ever rain.

We spent several days hunting jack rabbits which I enjoyed very much. I wish to say in closing this letter that this year 1912 may be the beginning of a happy New Year and close a happy and prosperous one to all my friends, neighbors and relations in Boone county. And I also wish the editor much success and I hope I may always have the chance of reading the Recorder.

Yours Truly,
G. N. SMITH.

The following item appeared in last Sunday's correspondence from Louisville to the Cincinnati Enquirer:

"An optimist and usually wears a smile. The Judge has led many a political fight and there never was a 'darkest hour' in his political career. He is not a pessimist, but a realist, optimistic and smiling. An incident occurred this week, however, which took the smile from his face. The Judge's devotion to the members of his family is known to all his friends. Some years ago one of his sons was injured in a football game. This injury finally became acute, and it was found to be necessary this week for the boy to undergo a serious surgical operation. The operation was successful in every respect, but its nature was such that the Judge has shown considerable anxiety.

BOTH EARS FROZEN

While Covering A Long Route
In Search of Furs.

HAS TO SLEEP ON HIS BACK NOW.

Notwithstanding last Thursday was a very uncomfortable day to be out of doors, Herbert Kirkpatrick, the local dealer in furs, left home early in the day walking, with the avowed intention of covering one of his long routes among the trappers in the country. He headed for Big Bone Baptist church neighborhood, in which are several persons engaged trapping.

He went well until about the middle of the afternoon, when he discovered, that in attempting to make a short cut across the fields to the home of a trapper who dwells on Gum Branch, he had lost his way and scarcely knew where he was going. Finally he came upon a rural mail box, and being well acquainted with the owner of the box he was able to figure out his location and get his bearings. After traveling an hour or so over ridges and hollows, he reached the house he expected to reach in half an hour when he started on the intended short cut. As he traveled in the weight of his cargo increased and his propelling power decreased, and when darkness began to gather he was about five miles from Burlington. At about 7 p. m. he halted at Owen McMullen's in Grange Hall neighborhood, where he secured entertainment for the night. He had been in the house a short time when Mr. McMullen's attention was attracted by the unusual appearance of the ears of his guest, and proceeding to investigate he discovered that they were badly frozen, of which fact the peregrinating dealer in furs was wholly unaware, as they had not inconvenienced him in the least during the day by reason of being cold.

As soon as the traveler began to get warm he was satisfied that his hosts diagnosis was correct, and simple remedies for a frost bite were administered, but the rapid increase of the area could not be arrested, and by Friday morning each of the frost-bitten members was about three times its normal size and very sore, and have been a source of considerable annoyance ever since.

Mr. Kirkpatrick cannot understand how it was his ears were so badly frozen when he has repeatedly withstood the attacks of the frost on colder days than last Friday.

There has been some talk that the unfortunate man equip himself with a wireless telegraph apparatus that he may keep in touch with people when hereafter he is in a strange territory.

Weather Forecast.

Washington, January 14.—Relief from the intense cold which prevailed in all sections of the country during the past few days is promised during the coming week.

"The general pressure distribution, as shown by the weather map of the Northern Hemisphere during the last several days," says a bulletin issued to-night by the Weather Bureau, "is such as to indicate a general reaction to normal temperature conditions over the eastern half of the country by the middle of the week and to temperature above the seasonal average in the western district throughout the week."

"This week will be one of generally fair weather except that the Rocky Mountains, except that a short period of rain in the Southern and snow in Northern States, will attend a disturbance which will appear in the Northwest Tuesday, and the Middle West Wednesday or Thursday and the Eastern States about Friday. Precipitation will be above the normal in the North Pacific States."

To Creamery Patrons.

We as a Company want to ask a special favor of the patrons of the Clover Leaf Creamery Company.

Let us bring the milk to the Creamery three times a week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and to be careful to bring the milk cool the nights milk before milking with the morning milk. And not to let it freeze. By complying with these three conditions we will give each patron the proper treatment. It will also enable the butter maker to make first class butter and get the patrons top prices for their butter.

President and General Manager.

Direct From Klondyke.

The cold wave that struck this part of the country, brought last Thursday night, was the genuine article, direct from the Klondike region, and was ornamented with all the frills and furbelows of the most pronounced Alaskan styles and patterns. Its arrival was correctly foretold by the weather clerk, who placed the temperature to be at eight below zero, but when the local returns began to come on Friday morning, the following were found to be some of the cold spots in Boone county: At J. L. Jones', near Landing, 30 degrees below zero. At W. F. Grimsley, on the Ohio river, near the mouth of Big Bone creek, 21 degrees below. At Bellevue, 22 below. At F. Grant's, near Bullittsville, 10 below. At W. F. Grant's, near Gunpowder church, 19 below. At B. F. Akin's on Woolper creek, 8 below. At Limaburg, 16 below at 8 a. m. At Riddell's store in Burlington, 12 below.

NEW WRINKLE.

To Be Tried in Texas.

Convicts To Work For Counties
on Roads as Free Laborers, Without Guards or Manacles.

Galveston, Texas.—The honor plan of working state convicts to be inaugurated in Texas is an idea of Governor Colquhoun, who was delighted to find many veteran students of criminology agreeing with him that it will prove a success.

The plan of hiring out 2,000 convicts to build roads and construct bridges and engage in other public work to be paid for by the counties is not original, but to divert these convicts of their prison garb and permit them to work like free laborers at the rate of 50 cents per day for their hire met with some opposition.

It is proposed that one half of the wages be paid to the family of the convicts and the other half to the state penitentiary fund.

Extreme penalties will be provided for any convict who violates the trust, and he will have to serve the balance of his term in confinement if he runs away or commits any other crime while on parole.

Five hundred men will be given the first trial, and this number increased to 2,000, with the counties employing the men paying for their keep but allowing them to work as free laborers and without guards or manacles of any kind.

The punishment for any one who breaks the trust has been prescribed by a vote of the convicts, which the Governor and prison board approve.

Against the State Fair.

It is said the State Fair managers will ask the legislature for an appropriation of $225,000. This means that the institution is not self-supporting and needs to be bolstered up from the public crib. If the people of the metropolis in which it is located have not found enough good in it to support it, what support, if they have found none, will it have if it withholds their patronage, it does not deserve to live. What the educative influence of the State Fair is, it is up-lifting and does it tend to make a better grade of citizenship? What benefit does it confer upon the State? None whatever. It is not, and is not designed to be, an encouragement to stock breaking, except in the most incidental fashion. Those who heard it said the exhibition of stock at its meetings is not comparable in point of excellence to that seen at several of the rural fairs. In attracting large numbers of people from the rural communities to the city, it may incidentally help the hotels and restaurants there, but it is a distinct injury to the rural merchants. If this institution of doubtful good at the best cannot help its own row without the aid of the city, why not let it go the better. We trust the whole state will rise up in protest against this scheme to rob the people.—Harrodsburg Herald.

Jack Kissed Him on the Chin.

Malchus Southern, of Pt. Pleasant neighborhood, expected to Burlington, on foot, last Monday, and upon his arrival it was discovered his chin was frozen. He was given a snow bath and soon thawed out. He accused the cold west wind all the way from home.

RIISING SUN'S RAILROAD.

Three Prominent Business Men of Rising Sun Are Among The Officers.

SURVEY TO BEGIN AT ONCE

The Indiana and Ohio Southern Interurban Railroad company is duly incorporated Jan. 3, its capitalization being $150,000. The company is officered as follows: L. J. Harris, president; J. W. Whitlock, vice president; J. N. Perkins, secretary; Raymond S. Lynch, treasurer; Raymond S. Zeller, general manager. Mr. Zeller will also serve as purchasing agent. Messrs. Harris, Whitlock and Perkins are residents of this city and Messrs. Lynch and Zeller reside in Chicago.

In a statement made to the Local last night Mr. Zeller said: "The survey between this city and Aurora will begin the part of next week. Next will come the voting on the 2 per cent tax. If that is voted in our part will start throwing dirt immediately."

"The franchise offered Dec. 4, by the council of Rising Sun for our acceptance has not been accepted. A few changes of the ordinance will be asked for and the council will readily grant what will be asked."

"All indications are that a franchise will be granted by the city of Aurora where its council meets Monday evening."

"You may say that what to some has appeared an unwarranted delay in the working of our plans is due wholly to the fact that the arrangement of certain details in connection with the franchise necessarily called for time. There are many things in this particular line that will not admit of haste."

In my mind there is no question but that the road to Madison and thence to Louisville will be an assured thing."

"There will be $75,000 worth of 5 percent preferred stock and accumulated dividends to be placed and we would like to see the bulk of that 'planted' locally."

"The road will positively carry freight and passengers. It is northern and its southern terminus. It will, of course, handle passengers, express matter, mail, etc., but will emphasize the fact that the road will take care of all freight business."

"Temporarily our office headquarters are in the Rising Sun Depot. But our stock books are open for subscription."

Mr. Zeller declares that he is sanguine of success in his plans for the road, and that the ground until the building of the road assumes practical form.

BUICK TO HAVE

CHOICE OF SPACE

Automobile Show At Madison Square Garden, New York,
January, 1912.

Choice of floor space and position for the Annual Madison Square Garden Automobile Show is prized higher by automobile manufacturers throughout the world than any other feature connected with the automobile industry. The arrangement has always been in vogue for allotting this space as follows: All the leading manufacturers are members of the automobile association, and the space is allotted to each manufacturer furnishing the association a sworn statement of the volume of business the manufacturer has done the year preceding the holiday of the show; the first choice going to the member showing the largest volume.

There has been so much said about the relative production of the several leading automobile manufacturers of America, the size of their plants, number of cars produced, etc., that this information is especially relevant at this time, and it is interesting to know just how several of the other manufacturers, who have claimed the largest volume of business, stand in the line of being the largest manufacturers of automobiles in the world the past year, will meet this argument.

Two Mistakes. They Had Paid Their Taxes.

Jack Stephens' name appeared in the delinquent tax advertisement last week as the result of a double mistake. The delinquent was assessed in the Union precinct as "Jack Stephens" and in the Burlington precinct as "J. N. Stephens." He lives in Burlington to the Union precinct but had paid his taxes promptly as he always does. The name of Henry Corp of Petersburg appeared on the list also because of a mistake.

MOULDY FEED

Cause Of Epidemic Among Stock in Ohio Counties.

Investigations have been made recently by Dr. Morgan B. Lamb, assistant State veterinarian of Ohio, in the prevalence of disease and serious loss among horses in counties in the Southeastern part of the State.

A number of the affected animals were seen and other observing the symptoms present and making an examination of the feed supplied them, a diagnosis of so-called "mouldy poisoning" was easily arrived at.

The information from the local veterinarians and stock owners along with observation made during the visit, seemed to establish that in each instance the case history of the feed had been corn and fodder that were mouldy.

In a few cases only one or the other had been supplied. The corn examined was found to be badly worm eaten, mouldy and fermented; also fodder was of a poor quality, showing evidence of fermentation during the process of the weather conditions during the past season were such as to cause the spoiling of much more of the fodder than in other years and in fact in certain localities it is difficult to find any corn and fodder of good quality.

Dr. Lamb says it is believed that during the process of fermentation and growth of fungi, some poisonous substance is formed which, when taken into the system of the animal, has a selective action for the central nervous system, producing in the larger number of cases a fatal intoxication.—Maysville, Ky., Public Ledger.

Committee Assignments.

In the distribution of Committee assignments in the House of Representatives by Speaker Terrill, Boone's Representative, G. E. Carroll, was placed on the following committees: County and City Courts, Corporal Institution, Constitutional Amendments, Fire Insurance, State Capitol, Encroachments. Mr. Carroll is chairman of the committee on County and City Courts.

Pulled Off A Dead Heat.

It is said that J. M. Eddins and Harry Roberts pulled off a dead heat in the bidding for carrying the mail for the next term from Burlington to Erlanger twice a day, and that their bids, each of which was for $700 per year, are the lowest bids for the job, which is about $700 a year too little.

Used Too Much Muscle.

Last fall Jack Eddins, the local telephone lineman, went over all the wires in his jurisdiction and tightened them, using a little too much muscle in the operation, and as a result, the extreme cold weather has snapped many of these wires, causing the lineman considerable work during the severe weather.

It Slept.

What has become of that pipe line for which money was made through this county a couple of years ago? The right of way was secured and at that point proceedings were commenced everything pertaining thereto has been as silent as the grave.

No Flies At His House.

The old Confederate, W. W. Grimsley, who resides on the Ohio river near the mouth of Big Bone creek, occupied the county spot in Boone county, last Saturday morning, 31 degrees below zero.

A COMBINATION

In Restraint of Interstate Commerce, is the Burley Tobacco Society.—Such is the Ruling of the U. S. Court.

THE ESHELBY TOBACCO CO.'S CLAIM DEFEATED.

In the trial of the E. O. Eshelby Tobacco Co., against the Burley Tobacco Society, in the U. S. District court in Cincinnati, last week, Judge Hollister said:

"Here is a case in which the growers of Burley tobacco in three states, for the purpose of protecting themselves—in which they have the sympathy of everybody—entered into a combination by which they were to get their own prices for their tobacco, as against the iniquitous force of the Tobacco Trust, which was compelling them to sell it below its value, probably. They entered it on an agreement by which they pooled their tobacco, and sold it in Cincinnati at a price last week, Judge Hollister said:

"The agreement contemplated not only the growing, but also the sale of the tobacco. The object of the agreement was to sell tobacco at their own price; and when they sold it they knew it would go into interstate commerce, and in fact, the large part of it did become the subject of such commerce. They grew it and sold it for the purpose of giving it into channels of interstate commerce; they made the contract, knowing that the tobacco would enter into interstate commerce, and fixed the price, knowing that it would become a part of such commerce. They would not otherwise have made the agreement."

"The case calls for a broad construction of the statute, although not more sweeping than its plain language warrants. Having in view the evils to be remedied by a proper construction of the statute, the good to be done to the people of the United States by such a construction, and the necessity of imperative commerce in the necessities of life, of in commodities of such a character that they have become necessities of life, not so to themselves, it would be taking a narrow view of the matter to hold that those rules which might be still applicable to individual buyers in relation with respect to the place of delivery should affect this great question, when everybody must know that the tobacco of the United States is to be put into, and was put into interstate commerce, and the price fixed through combination of the growers to that end."

"I believe that the Supreme Court, when the case reaches it, as it will, and as it ought, will say that this contract was made with reference to a community which must go into interstate traffic and which, as a matter of fact, did go into interstate commerce; since those who bought it were in almost every state in the Union."

"The contract was an unreasonable restraint of commerce between the states because its direct purpose was to suppress competition in and to embrace and maintain prices of a commodity which, when sold, entered, as to the most of it, into interstate commerce."

"It seems to me, therefore, that I must hold that this contract was an illegal combination obnoxious to the provisions of the Sherman antitrust act, and that there is no question for the jury to consider, except the amount of damages, if any, the plaintiff is entitled to."

Notwithstanding the above ruling of the court, the jury found for the defendant, the Burley Tobacco Society, the defendant, the E. O. Eshelby Co. having failed to show that it had been damaged by reason of the pool.

CENTENARIANS

Trudge Two and a Half Miles
Through Snow at Louisville
To Seek Help From Cold

Louisville, January 14.—Two centenarians, Sadie Payne, 109, and Malinda Tomlin, 102, negroes were taken to a hospital at the headquarters today seeking charity. They trudged through the snow from the outskirts of the city two and one-half miles to town. Their plea for succor was not in vain. When they left the commissary they staggered under the weight of heavy baskets of provisions which had been given them.

Kentucky's New Senator.

The election of Ollie James is the fitting reward of faithful party service and lovable personal character.

The famous Representative from the Gibraltar of Kentucky Democracy through travels and travels that tried men's souls knew no turning to the right, or the left, and in the fullness and the ripeness of time preferment has come to him naturally, even as the apple falling from the tree; the recognition by the plain people of one of themselves, big in brain and large in bone, sound in understanding and in heart, to pass in their name, and likeness as their agent from the Lower House of Congress where he has served so long and with credit, to the Higher, where let us hope his career will be equally brilliant and happy.

The Courier-Journal commutes the Democracy of the entire State upon this auspicious beginning of the process of coming together which marks the beginning of the Presidential year, to end gloriously with the election of a Democratic President.—Courier-Journal.

RURAL MAIL CARRIERS

Have Experienced Tough Times
So Far This Winter.

Rainy Weather, Muddy Roads,
Snow Drifts and Blizzards.

The rural mail carriers in the county have been having a pretty tough time so far this year. The Courier-Journal commutes last Friday was the worst in their experience. By making a terrible fight with the snow two of the three carriers on the Burlington routes succeeded in making their trip. Wm. Hughes, carrier on No. 1 was informed after reaching Ira Ryle's near the Commissary that it would be impossible for him to get thru a long snow drift on the Woolper and Petersburg pike near John's Creek, and he came back. Elmer Conley, carrier No. 3 went out on horseback and succeeded in passing through some deep banks of snow in one of which his horse fell, but before it got through, but Mr. Conley kept his saddle.

Newton Sullivan, who was enjoining by William Gaines, carrier on route No. 3, had a strenuous trip, the like of which he does not care to undertake again. By a heroic struggle succeeded in getting back this side of Bullittsville, where he plunged into a snow drift where his horse stalled, and being unable to go forward or back out he unhitched his horse and left his buggy fastened in the snow drift. He finally made his way thru the immediate vicinity of the Commissary and showed up at the Burlington office somewhat belated and very tired.

One thing to the advantage of the rural carriers last Friday was the late arrival of the mail from Cincinnati, having started out on their routes before that mail arrived in Burlington, the mails were not as large as usual.

It Depends on Conditions.

A Washington dispatch says: "Republican members of Congress, who sent an emissary to Col. Roosevelt recently in an effort to learn his exact presidential intentions have received the following reply: 'The Colonel believes that a condition may arise which will result in his being extended a practically unanimous call that he cannot ignore. If such a call should come he will be the Republican candidate in 1912. Before such a condition can arise President Taft must concede that he cannot be re-elected.'"

"Thus far, lulled into sweet dreams of success by the colored reports which are given him, Mr. Taft intends to run again and believes he can win. Thus the obstacle between Roosevelt and the nomination in the turn of the President's mind."

Too Cool For Young Mutton.

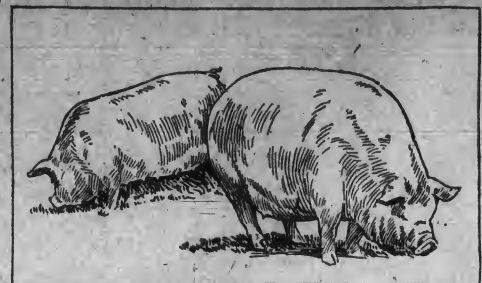

The weather this month has been pretty severe on the young lambs, but, fortunately, the arrivals have been very limited to date. The herdsman who has to make numerous trips to the barn after the cold nights to attend the welfare of his juvenile sheep is almost persuaded to abandon the raising of the mutton product.

INVESTIGATION SHOWS MONEY OBTAINED BY PRODUCING PORK

West Virginia Expert Gives Result of Experiment With Two Brood Sows With Twelve Pigs—Animals Conservatively Valued at $65 When They Were Eight Weeks Old.

First Prize Small Yorkshires.

(By A. J. LEGG, West Virginia.) A few years ago I was talking to a farmer and business man who said that he always thought that it cost nearly 20 cents per pound to produce pork.

At that time he had not had much experience with hogs and I could not give him any definite figures on the subject, but it put me to investigating. I put a 31-pound grade pig in a pen, fed him and mixed ground feed such as the farm produced mixed with water.

When the pig was five months old he was slaughtered and weighed 103 pounds.

The pig had eaten 384 pounds of feed at $1.00 per hundred pounds. If the pig is valued at $2.00 at the time the feeding began it would make the pork cost $0.055 per pound.

Last spring I weighed and kept an account of the feed required for two brood sows with twelve pigs.

The feeding began about a week before the pigs were farrowed and continued until the pigs were eight weeks old.

At the end of the period I found that the pigs averaged thirty pounds each and that I had fed them the following ration with the retail value that prevailed here at the time:

585 lbs. wheat middlings, $1.70	per 100.....$ 9.10
One and a quarter bushels of corn, $1.00 bushel.....	1.25
102 lbs. mixed feed, $2.00 per 100.....	2.04
50 lbs. corn meal, $2.00 per 100.....	1.00
3 1/2 bu. potatoes, 40c per bu....	1.00
Total.....	$14.00

If we divide $14.59 by twelve, the number of pigs, we find that the feed bill cost practically $1.20 each for the pigs.

A fair estimate of the labor caring for the sows and pigs and feed for the sows during the gestation period would likely add $1.00 per head to the cost of the pigs which would put the cost up to $2.20 each.

They would have sold readily at from three to four dollars each right from the farm. I sold nine of them for breeding stock for $2.50 and have on hand one of the best ones for a brood sow and two of the smaller ones for killing. In all the pigs are conservatively valued at $65, at eight weeks old.

APPARATUS FOR TESTING SEED

Iowa Man Designs Cabinet for Testing—Gives Many Varieties of Corn in One Cabinet.

An apparatus for testing seed corn has been designed by an Iowa man and provides for the trying out of many varieties of corn in one cabinet. A stand carries a series of trays, each tray made in two parts, hinged together at one side. The upper part is a lid, but the lower part has a shallow rectangular depression in it. In this depression are rows of little holes and over them is placed an absorbent sheet out to fit the rectangle. This sheet has perforations above the holes

New Seed Corn Tester.

In the bottom of the tray. The seeds are placed in the holes and the absorbent sheet laid on top. Water can then be applied through the perforations and the absorbent quality of the top sheet will retain the moisture. Means are provided for identifying each individual seed so that the tester can tell which varieties do the best.

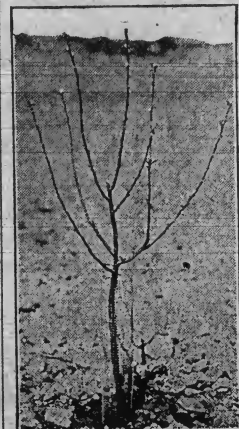

Study Experimental Forestry. In order to give students practical work in forestry the forestry department of the College of Agriculture, Columbus, O., is preparing to plant two acres of land on the university farm to forest trees. Seeds of from 12 to 16 kinds of trees will be planted in rows for experimental purposes. This includes catalpa, ash, locust, walnut, hickory, butternut, persimmon, maple, boxelder, oak, osage orange, blackberry, hawthorn, alantus and others. The five acres of forest tree nursery near the university arboretum will also be planted to trees for experimental purposes. About 30 bushels of seed have been gathered this fall by Prof. O. H. Goets and his classes in forestry. The department has also received between 300 and 400 conifer seedlings from the forest service of New Mexico, and is expecting more from other states.

PRUNING CURRENTLY INCREASES SIZE AND IMPROVES QUALITY

Important to Know Which Limbs are Useless and Which Valuable—Apple Trees Should be Kept Low and Open so Spray and Light May Reach Everywhere—Aid in Picking.

Pruning done correctly will increase the size and improve the quality of most common fruits. The expense of picking will be lessened and the expense of handling will not be so great, because there will be more of the first grade and less of the poorer grades of fruits. Then the results of spraying will be more satisfactory and, if the tree has been pruned, injuries to the wood and fungous pests are not so likely to be present. This was the information given a few days ago by D. E. Lewis, assistant in horticulture at the Kansas Agricultural college.

The object of pruning, Mr. Lewis says, is to obtain as much good fruit as possible from as little wood as possible.

To Plant Straight.

are borne on wood two or more years old, while peaches grow only on one-year wood.

The apple tree should be kept low and open so the spray may reach all limbs; to change the tree from an undesirable to a desirable shape; to rid it of disease spots and dead wood; and to open it to admit light and air. Fungous growths develop best in dense shade. Pruning makes conditions unfavorable for them because light is admitted. But must be taken that direct sunlight does not reach the larger limbs for too long a period every day. That may cause "sun-scald."

It is important, before trying to prune, to know where and how the fruit is borne. Then enough bearing wood to produce a good crop the following year should be left. This may be done and the tree made the desired form at the same time. Apple

SOUTHDOWN BREED IS UNEXCELLED

The Southdown breed belongs to the short-wool class and for quality it is unexcelled in the market. Each year the butchers select these lambs as being the best for the market. Indeed, the mutton from this breed of sheep commands the best price in the market on account of its quality.

This breed has been used to improve the quality of some of the other Down breeds of sheep to a larger extent than has any other distinct breed. Its low set, broad back, well sprung rib, full leg and stylish appearance make it attractive wherever found.

This breed has a comparatively dense fleece of good quality, but short in staple. The cross on the western bred ewe was a good one, the lambs being good feeders, but were smaller than other breeds when finished.

The hymenial altar has been a place of frequent resort in the East Bend neighborhood this winter, and the excessively cold weather does not cause any delay in the consummation of contracts matrimony. The bride of the country, and last Monday Elmer Deck, 21, appeared at the office of the county clerk over at the court house and secured a license to wed Miss Susie Riggs, 20, at the home of her parents the next day. Some of the groom's friends and acquaintances in Burlington suspected his business when he came into town, Monday, wearing a regular summer's day smile.

NO. 1 PIKE STREET, NEAR MADISON AVE., COVINGTON, KY.

Personal Mention.

Mr. J. W. Duncan has been in a very feeble condition for several days.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Easton out on the Petersburg pike, are entertaining relatives from the city.

Mr. and Mrs. Walrath spent a few days last week with her relatives in Bellevue neighborhood.

Chester Tanner, who moved from Limaburg to the Hopeful neighborhood, was a caller at this office, Tuesday.

Craig Baldon, who has a good position in the city, spent Saturday night and Sunday with his wife in Burlington.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Long, of Long Branch, were Monday guests of Mrs. Long's parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Crisler.

Rollin Dix was confined to the house several days, last week, being threatened with blood poisoning resulting in a small scratch on one of his ankle.

Newton Sullivan, who subbed on Burlington R. D. 3, several days last week, is confined to his room at the home of his father out on the Petersburg pike, having a severe cold.

W. H. Rice and J. S. Surface, of Florence, were among the business visitors in Burlington, last Monday. They were pretty well cooled when they struck the town, but the Recorder's stove soon gave them relief.

T. J. Walton, a prosperous farmer in Commissary neighborhood, has been in bad health and confined to the house for some time. Mr. Walton has numerous friends and they hope to see his health return with the coming of good weather.

H. J. Marshall, of Aurora, and Mr. A. Davis, of Arizona, were in Burlington, several hours, last Saturday. Mr. Davis represents a gold mine in Arizona, and in which Mr. Marshall and Marcus Collins, of Wynn, Arkansas, are interested. Considerable of the stock has been disposed of in Aurora and immediate vicinity. Mr. Collins, one of the largest stockholders in the mine, spent his boyhood in the Locust Grove neighborhood, in this county.

Give the Countersign.

Try to enter the newspaper office. Advance to the inner door and give the countersign. The devil will attend to the alarm. You will give your name, postoffice address and number of years you have been in the paper. You will advance to the center of the room where you will address the editor with the following countersign: Hold the right hand about two feet from the body, with the thumb and fingers clasping a ten dollar bill, which you will drop into the editor's hand, saying "were you waiting for me?" The editor will grasp your hand and bill, pressing it and will say: "You bet!"

Buying Tobacco.

Carl Cason, down on Middle creek, sold his tobacco to Geo. Bohanan at $10 per hundred. The same buyer bought Irvin Rea's crop on James E. Smith's farm near Burlington, at 10-1-2 cents a pound. Both crops to be delivered in Aurora. Mr. Bohanan, the buyer, lives in the Petersburg precinct. A. L. Conner, the local dealer, has bought several crops, paying William Carpenter, of the Locust Grove neighborhood, 12 cents for his crop. He has bought several other crops, but at lower figures.

Dr. Hayes Crippled.

Dr. H. H. Hayes, of Bullittville neighborhood, and Courtney Walton, of Idlewild neighborhood, were out sleighing last Sunday, and encountered a snow drift which resulted in the cutter turning over, throwing the occupants out and dislocating one of Dr. Hayes' shoulders. The injury was so severe that due to it was necessary to take the unfortunate man to a hospital in Cincinnati the next day. Mr. Walton escaped injury.

Got the Nerve.

Wallace Rice and sister, Lallie, pupils of the local High School, who come about eight miles every morning, have missed but one day since the severe weather began, and that was last Friday, when the snow drifts blocked their road. Pupils with the nerve they have displayed will make good in their studies.

Believe Me.

By trading at Thomann's you can save the Middleman's profit on Harness, Trunks and Blankets.

Wm. Thomann,

Covington, Ky.

Three men and a woman, claiming to live in Covington, struck Burlington last Monday. The horse that drew their carriage was broken down, and they employed Stanley Eddins to take them on to Petersburg where they said they had friends which they desired to visit. It was an awfully bad trip and Stanley stayed over night and for reason best known to the parties, they returned with him next day, but were not willing to pay him his bill until a heated argument ensued.

Morris Rice, of McVillie, passed thru town enroute home from the city, one day last week, with a load of goods for the store. A load of goods to C. G. Riddell, of Rabbit Hash, was also taken through Burlington, a few days ago, to be disposed of to the fishers, who, like the inhabitants of other small towns on the river, are just about off of God's footstool when cold weather stops navigation.

Miss Mary Roberts treated each of her pupils to a box of nice candy, one day last week, it taking the place of the holiday treat which was deferred because of the school being unexpectedly dismissed on account of the diphtheria scare.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good" is the old saw. It may be reckoned with the wind and it is a probability that the ice and coal men are the ones to whom it blows good.

Ex-County Judge C. C. Roberts' hay had been getting out of his loft very mysteriously, and last week he did a little detective work which satisfied him what had become of it.

Ernest Ryle, the Bellevue rural mail carrier, has kept a large scoop-shovel in his conveyance the past several days. He used it to dig through the snow drifts he encountered.

C. E. Easton came very nearly getting out of his feet, frozen, Tuesday, on his trip to Burlington from his home three miles out on the Petersburg pike.

Mr. Keys, butter maker at the local creamery, has been kept very busy for several days keeping Jack Frost from ripping up things generally at the creamery.

Keep a close watch on your horses and if you see anything that indicates they are not feeling just as they should, give them a purgative.

The Hebron Telephone Company is arranging to have an all day Sunday service, which will be a great convenience to the public.

The board of tax equalizers were in session yesterday to hear from those whose lists they increased at their former session.

It has been a long time since this part of the country has been so completely tied up so long by cold weather.

To-day is Courtney Jarrell's sale at the old Simeon Baldon's homestead on Woolper creek near Plattburg.

FARM AND ROAD IMPROVEMENT

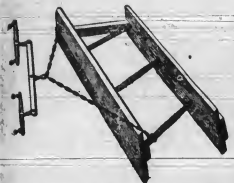

HOW AND WHEN TO USE DRAG

Successful Operation of Implement Involves Two Principles—Both Must Be Understood.

(By W. D. KING.)

The successful operation of a road drag involves two principles, which, when thoroughly understood and intelligently applied, make road working with this implement very simple. The first concerns the length and position of the hitch, while the second deals with the position of the driver on the drag. Each influences the other to a large extent, and successful manipulation of the drag is dependent upon an understanding of both of them.

For ordinary purposes, the snatch link or clevis should be fastened far enough toward the blade end of the chain to follow the team at an angle of 45 degrees. This will cause the earth to move along the face of the drag smoothly and will give comparatively light draft to the team, provided the driver rides in the line of draft. Sometimes, however, conditions are met which require special treatment, and in a rolling country such conditions are not infrequent. Often a flat place several rods in length or a seepy spot needs special attention.

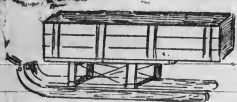

The distance from the drag at which the team is hitched affects the depth of the cuttings. Shortening the chain tends to lift the front slab from the ground; a longer hitch causes the blades to cut more deeply. The length of hitch may be regulated by lengthening and shortening the chain at the end which runs through the hole in the blade end of the drag. If small wheels are to be cut the doubletree should be attached rather closer to the ditch end of the drag. The drag will now move nearly ditch and foremost, and the driver should stand with one foot on the extreme end of the front slab. This will swing the drag back to the proper angle and will cause the blade to plow.

The drag does the best work when the soil is moist, but not sticky. The earth then moves freely along the faces of the slabs. If the roadway is very badly rutted and full of holes, it may be well to use the drag once when the ground is slushy. This treatment is particularly applicable before a cold spell in winter when it is possible to have a roadway freeze smooth.

HAULING MANURE IN WINTER

Sled Shown in Illustration is Better Than Bob-Sled, but Poor Substitute for Spreader.

It is sometimes difficult to get manure out to the field in winter, and then a sled comes in very handy. If it is balanced on a short frame, the contents can be easily dumped in piles as wanted. It is much better to have a sled of this kind, and for this purpose alone, than to use the bob-sleds which are generally in use. Of course this is a mighty poor substitute for a manure-spreader, but it is better to use it and get the manure out in the fields, than to allow it to run to waste near the barn.

Best Seed Corn.

The best seed corn is that grown on one's own farm. In selecting it remember that next year's corn will be like the type you select for seed. In curing seed corn remember that it will not grow if it freezes before being dried. Shuck ears when they come from the field and place in racks, or tie up with strings so that ears do not touch. A good place for drying is in the attic or in an upstairs room in the house, provided the air can circulate freely. Corn will not dry well if placed in barns or over grain bins in the granary.

Temperature of Storage Room. For keeping vegetable and fruits in storage over winter the temperature of the storage room must be low and even.

Silo is Best.

The silo is the only safe and sure way and the cheapest way to handle the corn crop.

HOW GOLD PENS ARE MADE

Metal is Rolled into a Ribbon and Pen Shapes Are Cut Out by Machinery.

The tiny tip of white metal seen on the under side of the point of a gold pen may be of platinum, but it is more likely to be iridium. Iridium is a very hard metal and it is expensive. It costs about four times as much as gold. The purpose of the iridium tip is, of course, to give the pen a more durable tip.

The gold pen maker buys his gold at the assay office in bars of pure 24 karat gold, which he melts and alloys with his silver and copper to the degree of fineness required. Gold of 14 karats is used in the manufacture of the best American gold pens, that being the degree of fineness deemed most suitable for pen use; but good pens made in this country for sale in France are made of 18 karats, the French government requiring that all articles exposed for sale in that country as gold shall be of not less than 18 karats.

The gold from which the pens are to be made is rolled and coiled until what was originally a thick, heavy bar of gold has been rolled into a thin gold ribbon about three feet in length by four inches wide. Then this gold ribbon is put into a machine which stamps out of it pen shapes, all still flat. Then on the tip of each of these pens is fused the iridium point, and then the shapes go to a slitting machine, which cut the slit in the pen. From this slitting machine the pens go through another, which gives them their rounded, familiar pen form, and then the pens are ground and polished and finished ready for use.

American gold pens in fountain pens or as dip pens are sold in every country in Europe in competition with pens of British or of German manufacture, and under the same competition they are sold throughout the world, in South America, Africa, Japan, China, wherever pens are used.

"LONG TIME" IS DEFINED

Remark of Governor of North Carolina to Governor of South Carolina Brought Into Court.

The oft-quoted remark of the Governor of North Carolina to the Governor of South Carolina has at last been brought into court, carefully construed, and found not to be so long as some other times. It is probable that it was the exceeding droughtiness of the interval which made it seem long. In a prosecution for the illegal sale of whiskey in Alabama, a witness testified that he had bought a pint of liquor of the accused "a short time" before the grand jury returned the indictment against him. It was objected that this evidence did not show that the prosecution had been begun within 12 months after the sale of the whiskey, the time limited by statute for beginning a prosecution. In discussing this objection, the Supreme court, in Wilson versus State, 56 Southern Reporter, 114, after holding that "a short time" might be taken in the connection in which it was used to refer to a period less than 12 months, said, by way of illustration: The expression "a long time" would refer to a very different period of duration and have a widely different meaning in meaning time when used by an archaeologist having reference to the period of existence of the Egyptian pyramids, than when used by Carolina Governors with reference to the time between drinks. The court may be right, but probably the Governor of North Carolina measured time as recommended by the poet who said: "We live . . . in feelings, not in figures on the dial."—Colliers.

Fair Offer.

It was a political meeting in the east end, and the M. P., an exceptionally popular man, was addressing his constituents. The politician in question rejoices in a luxuriant crop of hair. The audience was sympathetic for the most part; but there was one man in the front row of the audience who made numerous interruptions. He was a coal-heaver, apparently, and had but recently been heaving coals.

"Get your hair out!" he shouted during a most pathetic passage in the candidate's speech. The well-known catch phrase seemed particularly applicable, so a good many of the audience laughed.

But the M. P. was equal to the occasion.

"I will make a bargain with that gentleman," he said. "I will get my hair cut if he will get his face washed."

There were no more interruptions.—London Tit-Bits.

Woman's Sense of Honor.

Much has been done by our own higher education and widening field of work, and a woman now despises what used to be by repute her most formidable weapons—a lie, tears and a skillful appeal to the vanity of man. The writer has often noticed the marked greater breadth of view and the truer sense of honor among the present-day girl students compared with that which obtained when she herself was a student, and which is still largely that of women of her own age today. An even more striking fact is that the majority of men do not seem to expect as keen a sense of honor from women as they do from themselves. This mental atmosphere has surely a deterrent effect upon the growth of that sense.—A Woman Teacher, in London Spectator.

BREEDING CRATE FOR SWINE

Excellent for Use Where It Is Desired To Mate Animals of Different Sizes.

In response to a query for information regarding a breeding crate for hogs the Wallace Farmer makes the following reply:

The accompanying cut gives a general idea of the construction of a breeding crate. It is simply a crate strongly but lightly made of two-by-fours or one-by-fours, about six feet in length, two feet four inches wide, and three feet high. The crate should be closed in front but open behind. A bar may be pushed through the holes behind and adjusted according to the size of the sows. The object of a breeding crate is to mate animals of different sizes. For small, short-legged sows it is best to arrange a platform to stand on behind.

The time to begin breeding for spring pigs varies according to the climate, the shelter facilities, the time at which the pigs are generally marketed, and the number of litters which it desired to raise a year. Unless the farmer can furnish good shelter for his farrowing sows, and is prepared to give the young pigs careful attention, he had best not breed for the pigs to come earlier than the first of April. South of the latitude of southern Kansas, of course, pigs might come with perfect safety a week or so earlier than this. A man, however, who is in the business to make a success of it and is willing to give his pigs careful attention during the first two weeks of their lives, will generally find it most satisfactory even in the northern states, to breed for early March pigs. Early March pigs, if they are given good pasture and pushed right along, will be ready for market by early winter, when the prices are generally good. If a sow is to produce two litters a year the first litter must necessarily come early in order to give the sow time to fatten up previous to producing her second litter in the fall. The fall pigs should come as early in the season as possible to give them a chance to make a good growth before winter set in.

CUT-OUT FOR STOCK USEFUL

Bunch of Animals May Be Sorted into Different Lots Without Danger of Worrying.

Every barn yard or hog lot should have a short lane equipped with a cut-out as shown in the illustration, says the Homestead. A bunch of animals may be driven through the alley A and easily sorted into two different lots by swinging the gate B between the posts C and D with no danger of worrying or frightening them.

Why Sell Them?

A good many sheep and lambs are coming to market which are not fat and have to go at low prices. It looks like good business to hold these until in better flesh whenever possible to do so. At the prices these sheep and lambs fetch now they look like a good thing to buy or to keep and get ready for market. This native stock is selling quite low, because feeders as a rule, do not take it out of market to finish as they do Western stock. If farmers will either keep it or find a market for it in the country, it will make money for somebody.

Sheep for Mutton.

Mutton sheep should never be of mixed breeds on one farm. Get one good mutton breed, stick to it and develop it to the highest point possible. A lot of mixed lambs never bring the highest price on the market. It is those of one breed, uniform in size, shape and condition that get the big money.

Slugs Not Good for Hogs.

Slugs is not a feed that can be recommended for hogs, although a little of it may be fed to them.

Shelter for Cattle.

Cattle require more warmth or shelter than work horses or brood mares.

PORTABLE HOG PEN IS HANDY

These That Will Accommodate Several Medium Sized Hogs in Common Use by Small Farmers.

A portable hog pen that will accommodate several medium sized hogs or four shoats is in common use by the small farmers and truckers of the New England states. These pens are found convenient, sanitary and far superior to the stationary pen, which is more or less a nuisance in thickly settled sections. The portable pens are gradually coming into use in the trucking sections of New Jersey, as their many excellent points become better known. They are just the thing for the one-acre man. The following method of building a cheap, convenient hog pen that is portable is given by a New England farm paper:

Take two pieces of hard timber, white oak is best, 3 by 9 inches each, 15 feet in length, rounded off at the end in the form of a sled runner, then run parallel eight feet apart, with the rounded edge on the ground. Take four 2 by 4 scantlings and have in tenon in crosswise, one piece at each end and eight inches from the ends of the runners and place the others so as to support a floor in one-half of the pen. Adjust these strips so they will set about two inches below the level of the upper edge of the runners, then lay a floor of one-inch oak planks over one-half of the pen, leaving the other half a dirt floor. Some have the outer yard slotted, which will allow the hogs to graze off the grass, but will prevent the soil from being rooted up. The sides of pen should be slatted. Now mortise in 2 by 4 scantling at each corner and midway for posts on which to nail half-inch boards for the enclosure. One-half of the pen should be covered; and for this reason make the posts for the sliding about one foot longer on one side than on the other, so as to give sufficient slope to the roof. The roof should be high enough to allow a man to walk into the pen. If only one-half of the pen is floored there must be a partition across, and in this arrange a slide door so as to shut the shoats in or out of either section. The roof of covered pen may be made of half-inch and covered with tar paper, then give two coats of hot lime wash as a preservative. A pair of horses can readily move a pen of this size from place to place.

bearing surface is provided with extra-large calks, and the whole is fastened solidly to the hoof by means of hinges and straps.

Carrots for Stock Food.

No root is more relished by domestic animals than carrots. Weight for weight, they are somewhat less nutritious than potatoes, but the greater yield more than makes up the difference in quality. Horses are especially fond of carrots, and when not working hard should have carrots as a part of their ration. They keep up their condition and give them a fine glow.

When fed to cows they somewhat increase the richness of milk, and are thought by some to give a richer color to butter. They are also a valuable food for sheep and lambs.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Wheat middlings mixed with skimmed milk is the most nourishing and economical food for young pigs.

Fattening animals return 95 per cent of the fertilizing constituents of feeds to the manure.

There is an unquestionable shortage of beef and the consumer will realize increased prices in the next few years.

Any animal on the farm must have something besides a long string of ancestors to recommend it. Individual merit helps.

Corn cob charcoal or ashes from hard wood should be placed in the feeding pens, so the sows can get what they need.

If a small grass pasture can be attached to the hog pen it will go a long way towards reducing the cost of the grain bill.

Brood sows should have a large, roomy, clean, dry yard, separate from the stable yard, as they need and must have daily exercise.

Sheep are utilizers of waste. They clean fields of weeds, utilize to great advantage almost any kind of pasture and fit in well with farm practices either in the irrigated or dry farming belt.

GOT HIS NOTES MIXED UP

Absent-Minded Man Has Some Difficulty at the Book Store and the Grocers.

As the little man walked absent-mindedly along the sidewalk he suddenly stopped in front of a bookstore. It recalled to him the meaning of that piece of string on his finger, and with a brightened face he entered.

"Just a minute," he said to the clerk. "My wife wanted me to get a book for her—a certain novel she's heard a good deal about. I must find the memorandum she gave me. She wrote the name on a slip of paper, and I put it in my pocket."

After considerable fumbling he produced a small bit of paper, and laying it on the counter, took out his spectacles and adjusted them on his nose.

"Here's the name—Cobb's Cornatise. Yes, that's it."

"I'm afraid I don't know the book, sir," said the clerk apologetically, "but I'll look through the list of new ones." And he ran his eye over the list on the wall. "No, I'm sorry to say I can't find it here. You are sure of the name?"

"Yes, it's right here on this piece of paper."

"Well, I'm afraid we haven't got it then."

"But—but I don't dare to go home to my wife without it. I promised to get it for her."

The clerk called to another in the back of the store, who came forward. To the other he said: "Say, Bill, do you know of a book called Cornatise, by a fellow named Cobb?"

"What's that?" he asked in surprise.

The old gentleman broke in: "Cobb's Cornatise. Here, see for yourself."

"I'm afraid you've made a mistake," said the new arrival with a twinkle. "Cobb's Cornatise is a new breakfast food."

"Ah, now I see why the grocer didn't understand me when I asked him for a package of Queed," remarked the customer in manifest relief.

OLDEST TREE IS ON COS

It Measures 30 Feet in Circumference and Is More Than 2,000 Years Old.

The tallest trees in the world are the Australian eucalypt, which attain an altitude of 480 feet. The biggest are the mammoth trees of California, some of which are 276 to 373 feet in height, and 108 feet in circumference at the base. From measurements of the rings it is believed that certain of these trees are from 2,000 to 2,500 years old. The oldest tree in the world is said to exist on the island of Cos off the coast of Asia Minor. It is several thousand years old, but just how many no one has dared to say. The tree is carefully preserved by a wall of masonry around it, and the trunk is thirty feet in circumference.

But there are parts of trees in the form of useful timber which are even older, probably than any on the stump. Beams in old buildings are preserved today, which are known to be over a thousand years old. Plies driven by the Romans prior to the Christian era are perfectly sound today, and it is known that they have been immersed in water for upward of two thousand years.

Some woods have remarkably durable properties when immersed in water. They decay rapidly on the stump, many rotting in from five to ten years, but when immersed in water they last longer than iron or steel. An effort has been made by our government to preserve woods indefinitely by treating them with oils and tar products. Already telegraph poles and railway ties have had their average life extended from five to ten years by this process.—Harper's.

When the Worm Turned.

"No power on earth shall make me do it!" he declared, firmly. She approached close to his side. Her eyes blazed into his and his lips quivered.

"You shall do it! However you dread it, it must be done! You hear me?"

"I refuse utterly! Such a thing is unworthy for a man of pride and honor to undertake!" he repeated, drawing back from her as from a whip-lash.

Quickly she was at his side again, gripping his arm with fingers stiff, but hard as steel.

"She slipped a small knife into his hand—a thin, sharp-pointed piece of steel. 'There!' she said. 'His obstinacy was momentarily driving her to desperate measures.'"

Her voice broke with passion, and she cried, in a loud, angry tone: "William Tomkins, if you don't do what I say and go peel those potatoes at once, you'll go to bed without any dinner!"—Puck.

Proper Things to Say.

To a young woman who has forsaken school teaching for matrimony and housekeeping: "Don't you feel torn without anything to do?"

To a motorman: "Don't you sometimes get tired of stopping for people?"

To a doctor: "I should think your irregular hours would almost kill you."

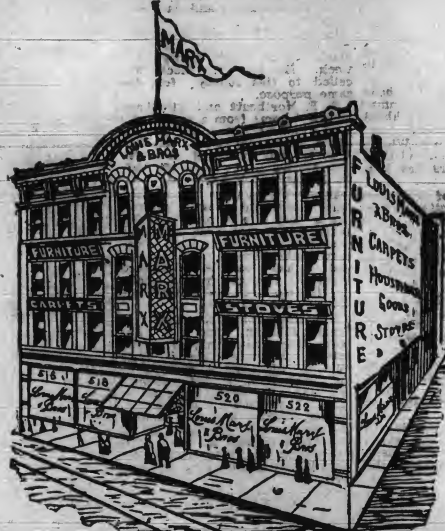

To a newspaper man: "But of course, I never believe more than half that I read in the papers."

To a postman: "Don't your feet ache by night?"

To a librarian: "You must enjoy reading the new novels ahead of everybody else in town."—Newark News.

The Circuit Judges.

The Kentucky Circuit Judges' Association has been holding its annual meeting in Louisville and there has been frank and free discussion of some of the obstacles to justice which are encountered in the administration of the laws.

The judges are to be congratulated on the formation of such an organization and on the courage with which they are setting themselves at work to bring about some reform in court proceedings. It is an open secret that we need such reform in Kentucky. It is encouraging, therefore, when our Circuit Judges, elective as they are by the people and beholden to political parties for their nominations, boldly denounce mob law and criticize the technicalities of the Criminal Code and the incompetency of jurors.

The history of Kentucky in recent years has not been lacking in events of mob violence that were to the highest degree discreditable. It is known of all Kentuckians that the average of homicide is high and that the percentage of convictions is decidedly lower than it should be. The frequency with which juries acquit in cases where the element of reasonable doubt is so diaphanous as to be imperceptible and unimaginable to the general public almost forces the conclusion that the jury system is a failure.

This state of affairs needs to be remedied and the Cincinnati Judges' Association can do a great deal in the way of alleviation. The judges, as a rule, are high-class men, well versed in the law and having adequate conception of their duty to the Commonwealth. In taking counsel with one another, they will lighten the problems with which they must contend and these will be the better equipped to deal with the questions which confront them individually. What is still more to be desired they can as a body more effectively locate the leaks and loopholes in the law and prescribe the particular sort of repair work that is best adapted for remedial purposes.

Mrs. Rose Johnson, wife of Frank Johnson, died at her home near Bear, Dick, of blood poisoning, Thursday night, 1912, at 10 o'clock. She was a member of the bank Lick Baptist church, and was only about 25 years of age. She leaves a husband, mother, brother and two sisters to mourn her death. Funeral services were held at the Baptist church of this place, Rev. H. C. Wayman delivering the sermon.

Marietta Cox was born in Petersburg, Ky., March 10th, 1839; departed this life Jan. 10th, 1912, aged 72 years, 9 months and 24 days. She was married Jan. 31, 1856, to Thos. Cox.

To this union eight children were born, four of whom survive. Frank Cox, Aurora, Ind., Allen Cox, Indianapolis, Ind., Chas. Cox, Petersburg, Ky., and Mrs. Anna Spencer, Chicago, Ill., all of whom came to visit her during her last illness.

Mrs. Cox united early in life with the Christian church at this place, of which she continued a faithful and consistent member till her life. Mrs. Cox's maiden name was Carson, and she was the last of a family of seven children. Mr. Cox died April 2d, 1912, this leaving her a widow for nearly 30 years. After three or four years she gave up her housekeeping and went to live with her children, dividing her time principally with her daughter, Mrs. Spencer, of Chicago, and her son, Charlie, of Petersburg, at which latter place she spent her last hours.

The kind loving hands of her daughter-in-law did all that was possible to make her last hours peaceable. Although she had a frail body and never was a strong and healthy woman, she lived her life of sacrifice, suffering helplessness and with her last conscious moments she was ever solicitous about the welfare of others, forgetting herself.

Her character was of that rugged kind, which always inspires confidence, and to come in contact with her was to feel that you had been strengthened and benefited.

The funeral was held at the residence of her son, Charles, conducted by her pastor, in the absence of her own pastor. A number of relatives and friends were present, after which the body was placed in the vault in Petersburg cemetery.

This ends the earthly life of one who loved much and suffered much, but whose soul has gone home to its Maker, to love and to be loved through eternity. Her faith was beautiful to see. She talked of dying as calmly as one would expect to take a very pleasant journey. She was ready and with her own hands she had made the preparation to the smallest detail. It wasn't a sad funeral, as we sometimes say. Of course, the separation is always painful to loved ones, especially when "Mother" goes away, but she seemed to know as well where she was going and her happy anticipation that the faith of those who were left behind was so strengthened, we felt the separation would only be for a short time until her own sweet spirit would woo us to her happy, happy home.

Burlington Camp M. W. A. met at the hall on the 8th and installed the officers-elect, and had a very interesting meeting. The evening's feast consisted of several gallons of fine oyster soup made by the hostess at the Boone House. It was served at the hall. Several of the boys about the town were invited and part of the evenings repast, which was enjoyed very much by all present.

Farm sleds have been put in use generally this month.

The Embattled Farmer.

Yesterday, in the Federal Court, in Cincinnati, where the Burley Society was arranged to meet, the tobacco pooled by the Burley Tobacco Society was intended for use in interstate commerce, had always been so intended and subsequently was used in interstate commerce; that the Burley Society fixed a price on this tobacco and refused to accept any price other than the one fixed and that this act is considered by him to be in violation of that portion of the Sherman anti-trust law which concerns interstate commerce.

This is a new doctrine of "intentions." The object of all production is consumption, and as Kentucky produces more tobacco than Kentucky can consume, the ultimate destiny of a large part of the Kentucky product is the mouths of non-residents.

But it is a great stretch of the Constitution to make the "intention," however vague or unconscious or unknown, the controlling factor in interstate commerce.

Commerce is an exchange not of intentions but of products. There are instruments of exchange, such as money, bills of exchange, drafts and transfers.

Charles was used entering trade between the States, become instruments subject to Congressional control.

But heretofore products have not become a part of interstate commerce until they have actually entered upon the process of exchange from one State to another.

Beyond this analysis, which seems conclusive, the facts are that the predatory giants have for twenty years been protecting themselves by various devices, one being non-resident citizenship.

Authorized by the laws of Kentucky, enacted by the Federal Department of Agriculture, the farmers organized for mutual protection. Doing equal justice to all purchasers, they confined themselves to State commerce.

In self-defense they organized, and this organization was the only protection they had from the Tobacco Trust.

Finally the Tobacco Trust was ordered to "dissolve." No penalty was imposed. It was not required to return stolen goods. It "dissolved" as a kalleidoscope "dissolves" the component parts were not altered, only their relation one to another; and tobacco stock of the Tobacco Trust brought higher prices in the market than before "dissolution."

Justice is a farce. The law is for the weak alone. The Trust goes on its way undisturbed, the farmer is arrested, shackled, fined.

In Chicago, where the packers are arraigned, their guilt almost confessed, the price of meat is rendered almost impossible by rulings excluding incriminating documents of first importance.

March of Labor-Saving Invention Rope-Making Machine Was Last on List.

There is nothing more prosaic than a rope, or that enters into a greater number of human occupations; and yet in the march of labor-saving invention, a rope-making machine was one of the last on the list. So long, indeed, did rope-making remain one of the manual arts that the name of the place where the work was done has become ingrained in popular speech; and the rope factory, though in no way meriting the appellation, is still known in some quarters as the "rope-walk."

Formerly it was considered a fact worthy of note that the government rope-walk at Boston could turn out a rope 1,030 feet long.

A young workman in a rope-walk saw that the twist could be applied to the rope instead of the strands if machinery was to take the place of the hand in rope-making, and he realized fame and fortune from the conception. His opportunity came with the proposition to grapple for the broken ends of the Atlantic submarine cable in the straits.

A rope fully 12,000 feet long was required for the grappling, but the task of making one of this unheard-of length could not be undertaken seriously by any rope-maker then in the business.

At this juncture John Good came forward with a proposition to build machinery from his own designs and make a rope in one piece as long as was wanted.

The offer seemed a bold one, but was accepted. The machinery was built, the rope made, the break in the cable found and repaired, and telegraphic communication between the old world and the new established.

WOMAN HAS A GREAT IDEA

Flat Dweller Proves the Old Saying That Necessity is Mother of Invention.

We are told that necessity is the mother of invention, and one feminine flat-dweller is willing to take a lot of credit for her own particular achievement. With two big wardrobes and a closet to her bedroom she was without room for her big hats and dresses. There were hats to the left of her, hats to the right of her—and dresses likewise.

So she conceived an idea. It is nothing more nor less than an under-bed wardrobe and an under-bed hat box made in the form of a long flat box mounted on four wooden wheels. The wardrobe holds several dresses that can be packed away full length without crushing. It is easily stowed away, and being fitted with brass handles at the sides and front, it is quite simply rolled from under the bed to the wardrobe. The hat box is made on the same principle, only it has iron rollers instead of wheels. One of her hats has very high trimming and that reposes in the top of her wardrobe. Both these under-bed wardrobes are stained mahogany to match the furniture.

Soaps in Panama.
All soaps imported here for laundry, scrubbing, and ordinary bath purposes come from England and the United States, the former exporting to Colon during 1910 $20,210 worth, while the amount from the United States was only $2,487. It has not been possible to obtain from the customs the value of the medicated and perfumed soaps imported into Colon, these being included under the item of drugs, but inquiries made of the druggists and dealers there establish the fact that the United States sells more medicated soap than England, while France sells more perfumed soap than either the United States or England. From the foregoing, it is seen that England leads in the sale of laundry, scrubbing, and plain toilet soaps, with the United States second; the United States leads in the sale of medicated soap, with England second; France leads in the sale of perfumed soap, with the United States second.—From Consul James C. Kellogg, Colon.

Hiding Dimples.
Nobody but the woman herself knew how bad she felt, but the beauty doctor knew how bad she wanted to make other people think she felt.

"Wanted to know if there wasn't some way to remove dimples, or at least to fill them up so they wouldn't show while she was in mourning," he said. "Three mighty pretty dimples, she had, too, one in each cheek and one in her chin. My diagnosis was that a gift of nature like that should be hidden. The woman seemed genuine, and I said, 'I'll show you dimples every time you open your mouth in mourning.'"

"That is what I call sorrowing some, even for a widow."

Tit for Tat.
When making out his laundry list the methodical man set down opposite each item the amount of money he should claim if the article were lost. One week the laundryman lost a shirt valued at $1. Without protest he deducted 85 cents from the month's bill.

"What's the matter with that other 15 cents?" demanded the methodical man. "Why don't I get that?"

"We kept that to pay for our work," the laundryman replied. "We had already washed and ironed the shirt."

Losing the Social Instinct

"My dear," said young Mrs. Allison, peeling off her gloves and flinging them down with a snap, "you did well when you renounced the frivolities of life."

"When I—er—what?" gasped the matron with auburn hair, as she dropped an extra lump of sugar into her caller's tea and set the cup down hurriedly.

"Well, why not?" inquired young Mrs. Allison. "That will do, dear. I take only two lumps, not the whole bowlful."

"Explain yourself, Celeste!" demanded the young matron with auburn hair, severely. "Has any one been saying that I am getting fat and staid or is this your inimitable way of criticizing my winter wardrobe?"

Young Mrs. Allison smiled inscrutably. "Celeste," said her hostess again, sharply, "if you weren't my best friend I should call that a positive grin."

Young Mrs. Allison continued to grin, happily. "Well, she said, after selecting the thinnest sandwich on the tray and biting into it with caution, 'to begin with, you've moved to a suburb, haven't you?'"

"Um-mm, is that all?" "No, but that's one thing." "Very well, what next?"

"And you've stopped wearing false hair."

"Why, yes, so I have," admitted the matron, tranquilly. "I got tired of the messy stuff, and when I happened to think it over I couldn't see any reason why I shouldn't let my hair stand on its own merits."

"Exactly," agreed young Mrs. Allison. "Thirdly, you've dropped the bridge club!"

The matron with auburn hair sighed. "I had to," she explained. "And," she added, with a sudden burst of confidence, "you've no idea, dear, what a relief it is. For two years, once a week, I've looked myself into my best clothes and sat at all of a pleasant run afternoon in some one's stuffy drawing room gambling for, let us say, a green sash that would make me look, if I won it, like a horse shoe poster. I have partaken enthusiastically of siruplike ice creams and only after forty-five minutes before dinner hour." She paused for breath and smiled suddenly upon her caller. "Instead of all that," she concluded, "I now repose in this easy chair with a book and a box of chocolates, which achieve the same effect upon my appetite, but are less strenuous."

"Nonsense," said young Mrs. Allison. "You're losing the social instinct, that's all! All suburbanites do. As I remarked to begin with, you have adopted the wise course."

She frowned thoughtfully, while her hostess waited in silence.

"Well?" her hostess demanded, finally.

"It's very tragic," said young Mrs. Allison. "You know my Aunt Elvira?"

"The poor woman who was so ill at your house last summer," she said.

"Poor nothing," contradicted young Mrs. Allison, sternly. "There's nothing the matter with Aunt Elvira but insatiable desires. She's so crabbed that her own children won't live with her, and she's so rich that her private relatives have to. She takes a private car down to Florida every winter and I had thought that Fred and I could make rather pleasant use of an invitation to go with her this year, because Fred didn't get any vacation in the summer."

"Well, my love, last week Saturday I positively dragged Fred home from the office to go out to the Country club with me in the afternoon. I felt that my system demanded the diversion and I didn't want to go alone. It was a horrid, chilly trip and our supper out there was miserable. When we got home this is the message written on Aunt Elvira's visiting card that met me in the hand of the maid:

"Dear Celeste—I'm sorry you couldn't take time from your pursuit of pleasure to comfort my tired and travel stained self. I'm going over to Cousin Emma's. Respectfully, A. E."

The matron with auburn hair gasped. "But did you know she was coming?" she asked.

"Oh, no," said young Mrs. Allison, composedly, "not having a sixth sense for her arrivals in town. It's just that of her little eccentricities, that's all. Cousin Emma goes to Florida on Thursday, I said, sadly."

"Well, of all things!" cried the matron with auburn hair, sympathetically. "After you and Fred had it all planned!"

"We'd," admitted young Mrs. Allison, slowly. "It's a matter of fact, Fred hadn't planned exactly. He seemed positively to enjoy the situation. He said he had a picture of himself going, anyway. And he added that he'd rather pound rocks than to go anywhere with Aunt Elvira. Good-by, dear; I'm going to join your easy chair brigade and do my hair flat in the back."

Logical Progress.
"The new show went like a breeze." "I was told the backer had to send a lot of drafts."

Are You One Of These?

Gunpowder, Jan. 19, 1912.

Some very respectable church members unwittingly place themselves side by side with those who oppose the church.

Every church, village and city, today, can be found many who hold themselves from the church. Some are non-believers, others think that they can serve God and perform all duties without the church of which Christ is the head. There would be no church today if the world were composed entirely of such persons. Then we would be without the principle and life that have evolved from the church of Jesus Christ. Did it ever occur to you that we have many Christians who by their lives and example tend to bring about this condition? The time and season are those in which our church has a great work to do. It is not sufficient to get boys and girls to attend Sunday school only. That school falls of its purpose which does not succeed in getting them to attend the regular church service. How can we best effect this interest, simply by the members setting the example?

Some one will say excuse me for I have an invite to a big dinner. I can't disappoint them. My friend, God invites you to the Sunday school and public worship. Can you afford to disappoint him?

The Lord says remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. This commands us to do his word when it is preached. This command is given to all; also to our children, and we teach it to them in our Sunday school.

The very purpose of the only purpose of the Sunday school is to lead the children to Jesus Christ, their Saviour, and thus finally into the kingdom of God. We certainly all agree to this. The only way to do so is by teaching them the word of God.

We have those in our church and I judge that other churches have the same that attend our Sunday school and church service occasionally. They are forever visiting some other church. Sometimes they go with a friend who belongs to that church; at other times they take some one else from another church to the strange church. They know every pastor in the community. They know every other better than they know their own Sunday school and church. On the one hand, when they are present you may find them the center of a group, telling how they do it at the other Sunday school. But these persons know very little about their own Sunday school. Are you one of these?

Every church has members who run after special services. They are on the lookout for such occasions. It does not matter about the character of the service if it is a special it suits them. You will find them at the home, yet they rarely ever attend special service at their own church. Are you one of these?

Another minister said to another "Sister, I think your church is a great church woman. I would think you would want hundreds like her." The answer was "If I had members were like her, we would not be in any church and we would be pastorless. Are you one of these?"

Sometimes there is a Sunday school where the members are about anything else in the church. With such Christians the work becomes a fad. They lack the love of Christ in the best sense and thus neglect the church, of which Christ is the head. If the majority of the Christians manifested no more interest, and no more activity, the general interest of the church, the doors of our church would be closed or at best the work of the church would be immensely handicapped. Are you one of these?

If you are then we should bow our heads in shame and go to our superintendent and pastor, and tell them we are pastoring service, and go to our Master and ask His forgiveness. Oh, that Christians be faithful to their own church, stand by your own pastor, stand by your superintendent, your own Sunday school, your own church, your own services and you will best bear the cross and follow the blessed Lord.

SOILS AND PROFITABLE FARMING

Judicious Use of Fertilizers in Rotation Systems, Whereby Humus Supply Has Been Kept Up Has Been Means of Making Many Eastern Farms Pay Good Returns—Methods of Culture.

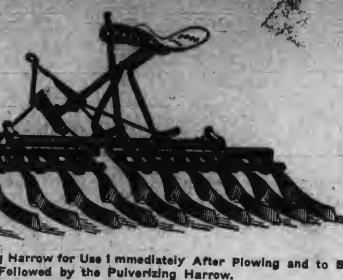

Fig. 1.—A Smoothing Harrow for Use Immediately After Plowing and to Be Followed by the Pulverizing Harrow.

The maintenance of productive soils and profitable farming on the high-priced lands in the eastern section of the country is due largely to the intelligent use of commercial fertilizers. This statement does not mean that the reliance on fertilizers alone has been the means of maintaining high crop yield, but that the judicious use of fertilizers in rotation systems, whereby the humus supply of the soil has been steadily maintained, has been the means of keeping the farm lands so productive.

Plowing for corn or other early spring crops usually begins about March 20, or as early as the weather and soil conditions will permit. The object of plowing early is to allow the soil to be thoroughly compacted by spring rains so that the soil and stubble turned under may decay readily and good capillary circulation of soil moisture become established. Sod for corn or potatoes is plowed from six to nine inches deep. Where the top soil is shallower than this it may be deepened by turning up one-half to one inch or so of subsoil at each plowing. The field is rolled or planked immediately after plowing to level the soil for harrowing and to prevent clod formations. Instead of rolling many farmers prefer to use a small, square seedling or smoothing harrow, such as is shown in Fig. 1. The field is then disk harrowed, jarring half in order to keep the field level, cross harrowing if necessary, until the soil is fine and pulverized. The disk harrow is followed by a spike-toothed or other smoothing harrow. (Fig. 2.) The use of the spike-tooth harrow is repeated every week or ten days, especially after a rain, until the soil is loose and dry. If the soil is loose and dry the field should be rolled again and the

SILLO INCREASES FARM CAPACITY

Turning to More Receipts as Beneficial Solution of Feed Problem.

(By GEORGE P. GROUT, Minnesota University Farm.)

It does not pay to devote high-priced land, for long periods, to pasturage and the production of hay. The land can be put to more profitable use. In order, therefore, that farming may continue profitable, instead of depending, as in the past, wholly upon the pasture for the chief food supply of their herds, many of our farmers are turning toward the silo as affording a beneficial solution of the feed problem. It is doubly beneficial in that it not only does away with the necessity of devoting so much land to pasture; but also, by making available a cheap supply of succulent and highly-relished food all the year round, it deprives stall-feeding of some of its objectionable features, while keeping the milk flow at a higher level. During the past two or three years, more silos have been built than in all previous years combined. The more prosperous farmers are often supplied, not merely with one, but with two good silos.

The economic value of this method of handling feed being generally recognized, the only real obstacle to the general introduction of the silo seems to be the first cost of the structure and of the machinery for filling it. More stock can be kept and profitably fed, per acre, when ensilage is grown, than by almost any other method of feeding.

The silo practically increases the producing capacity of the farm at least 10 per cent, and often more. A 160-acre farm with a silo will produce as much revenue as one of 180 acres without. Therefore, the first cost of a silo—like that of a dwelling house, a barn or a team—should be considered part of the initial investment; and, if one's capital is limited, it is better to buy a farm smaller by 10 per cent, rather than dispense with a silo. The producing value of a silo roller should be followed with a light harrow to prevent evaporation. Practically all of the barnyard manure is applied to the corn crop. The rate of application usually ranges from ten to fifteen tons per acre, depending upon the available supply. One successful farmer, whose fields yield 75 to 80 bushels of corn to the acre, never plows under manure even on sod, but spreads it in the spring after plowing and disk harrows it under.

When ten or more tons of manure are applied to the acre, most farmers in this section consider it unnecessary to apply commercial fertilizer except on very poor land or where corn follows corn. Where fertilizer is used for corn, a few farmers follow the practice of applying to this crop 300 to 500 pounds of fertilizer containing three to four per cent of nitrogen, eight to ten per cent of phosphoric acid, and ten per cent of potash. Other farmers appear to be getting as good results with corn by applying a fertilizer containing two to three per cent of nitrogen, eight to ten per cent of available phosphoric acid, and four to six per cent of potash, especially in connection with an application of eight or more tons of barnyard manure. Where either crimson clover or hairy vetch, or both, are turned under as green manure, the practice among successful farmers who plant winter cover crops for green manure indicates that as good yields of corn are obtained as from an application of eight to ten tons of barnyard manure. Moreover, where these green manure crops are regularly grown the nitrogen of the commercial fertilizer may be considerably reduced, if not entirely omitted.

CHEAPLY MADE BALE CARRIER

Simple, Inexpensive and Easily Operated Fork Especially Adapted for Heavy Work.

A bale carrier devised by Edward H. Boehme of Racine, Ill., is described in the Scientific American as follows:

A front presentation of a bale carrier patented by Mr. Boehme illustrates this article, and the inventor's object is to provide a simple, inexpensive and easily operated fork especially designed and adapted for lifting material, such as hay, straw and the like, in bales, which will firmly hold, during elevation and transportation, a plurality of bales, and which may be easily and quickly engaged with and released from the bales. The levers can not be disengaged until the trip rope is pulled.

Mrs. Moffett's Son

"What are you embroidering, Virginia? Each stitch you take seems a labor of love," said Mrs. Haynes. "Only a little gift for dear Mrs. Moffett. She has the most charming personality, and I'm glad to do it for her."

"How strange I never discovered it. To me she is one of those women who think it more blessed to receive than to give."

"How about her son?" asked Arline. "Only the other day she said that she only hoped her son would marry a congenial girl of good family some day."

"Do you know the young man?" asked Mrs. Haynes. "No, but I hope to meet him in the near future. She is so proud of him. He must be a splendid fellow."

"Isn't she beautiful with her youthful face and that crown of snowy white hair," said Arline. "It's impossible to discover whether she's an old young looking, or young old looking person."

"Girls," said Mrs. Haynes with an air of wisdom, "don't ever try to judge any one's age who lives in a hotel. If she had the trials of housekeeping and a big family to look after, maybe she would be smiling all the time."

Later when Mrs. Moffett and Mrs. Haynes were seated opposite each other at the dining table, Mrs. Moffett said "there isn't any plausible reason why all the young girls should be so attentive to me."

"Aren't you fond of young people's society?" asked Mrs. Haynes. "Surely, I'm still young in my ideas and can enter into all the feelings and emotions of a young girl's heart."

"The maidens are not so innocent now-a-days. The way the girls try to cooer the boys into showing them the good time amuses me. In my time it was the youth who courted the girl. As to respect to their elders it is 'Parents thou shalt honor your children.' The father is looked upon as a pampering check book, and the mother as a prospective mother-in-law to some eligible young man."

"You're too critical, Mrs. Haynes. You never had any children, that's the reason you are so harsh in judging other people's children. Ever since I arrived at this hotel I have been the recipient of kindness from all the young ladies."

"Thought," answered Mrs. Haynes, "that I overheard Arline and Virginia say you invited them to stay a couple of weeks at your home in the country."

"Yes, they accepted my cordial invitation instantly. Could I do less, when they devoted their whole time graciously to me? Each vied with the other in showing their real friendship."

"Then they will have a chance to meet your son," interposed Mrs. Haynes. "Only once or twice have I mentioned my personal affairs, but believe I told them that Clarence will be devoted to meet them and what a lovely charming son he is."

"They were wondering whether he was a professional man or in business."

"Absurd—I told them Clarence was nearly six feet tall and weighed 160 pounds, but I thought they knew he was only fifteen years old."

"After all," Mrs. Moffett said, "just received the latest novel from any of the young ladies will you ask them if they care to read aloud to me for an hour or so."

When Mrs. Haynes repeated the request to the girls each one offered their services.

"I must love to oblige Mrs. Moffett," said Arline. "Since when are you so obliging. I thought you said you were so fatigued," inquired Virginia, "now don't trouble yourself I'll read tonight as I have nothing else to do."

"But before you decide which shall have the coveted honor, let me announce to you that the grand young man whom Mrs. Moffett has been raving about is only a lad fifteen years old."

"The ideal! I'm sorry, but I can't read aloud tonight," said Arline, "I have a previous engagement."

"Don't count on me," said Virginia, "I'm going to try some new music. Eva will be glad to accommodate her."

"Certainly not," remarked Eva, "she's fooled us all along enough with hints and suggestions about her charming son."

Just then Mrs. Moffett glided in with a telegram in her hands. "Goodness!" she exclaimed, "my son just wired that he is going to spend the holidays with me here. I feared it was too far for him to come during vacation."

"Who will help me plan some surprise for him, and I know he'll show his appreciation to all who plan to visit me next summer."

"Really," commenced Virginia, "I've got plans for next summer so agreeable can accept your invitation."

"Oh, dear, I'm so disappointed, but then Arline you must stay all the longer," returned Mrs. Moffett. "She's been so enthusiastic about the rustic country life."

"I am so sorry, Mrs. Moffett, but I am going to stay home this summer, and with my hat to look upon this visit as a deferred pleasure," replied Arline.

The answer was: "Very distinctly, to-day. These two are first cousins, and were raised within a mile of each other, and both were in the Civil War, but on different sides. Mr. R. A. SOUTH POLE Believed to Have Been Reached By Capt. Scott's Expedition.

New York, Jan. 20.—Officials of the Geographical Society and various similar organizations are interested in polar exploration and are eagerly awaiting word from Captain Robert Falcon Scott, who expects to reach the South Pole on Christmas Day, and they believe that when he announces the result of his British antarctic expedition it will be to say that his quest was successful.

Lieut. Shackleton reached the furthest south on January 9, 1909, 97 geographical miles away from his objective point, and then turned back only because he ran short of provisions.

Captain Scott had 750 miles to cover from his winter quarters to reach the south pole.

The Scott expedition was outfitted as no other expedition was equipped before. The British government subscribed $100,000 to the fund and the British public contributed an annual sum.

Accompanying him in addition to a picked crew were five Lieutenants of the royal navy, two surgeons and three biologists.

FAVORITE BREED FOR EGGS

Leghorns Mature Quickly, Are Excellent Foragers, and Are the Best Layers.

If eggs are easier and cheaper to produce than meat and bring a better price, why are not the egg laying breeds the ones to keep? says a writer in the Poultry Journal.

The Leghorns mature quickly, are good foragers, and are the best of layers—the pullets often laying when five months old. They stand confinement well in winter. Owing to their great activity, they are not so likely to have indigestion and bowel troubles as the larger breeds. As the Leghorns are not so heavily feathered, they are more easily kept free from lice.

Now that we can hatch and raise chicks with incubators and brooders, it is not the proper thing to have the "egg machines," or the laying breeds, also?

There are some noted strains of Plymouth Rocks and Whites Wyandottes that are heavy layers—strains built up by patient and painstaking work in selection and breeding from the best layers, so that they lay almost as quick as well as the Leghorns.

The farmer has not the time to trap nest hens and to secure his best layers. And what is the need of it, when it is just as natural for the Leghorn to lay as it is for the Jersey cow to give us cream?

One hundred Leghorns can be kept on the space and in the same amount of feed required for 75 Plymouth Rocks, and I am sure the Leghorns will give better returns in money.

Anyone with a decided preference for a particular breed of fowls, as he would enjoy them more and take better care of them than of any other breed. After experimenting with several breeds, the Leghorns are my choice, and I have told why.

Carrier Eggs to Market.

Here is a device for carrying eggs where they are delivered to customers in the city, writes A. J. Magee in the Farm and Fireside. It is made of ordinary plastering lath planed smooth and nailed together with small nails. Two strips are nailed together in V-shape for each corner. The bottom is made of thin board nailed to run strips on the inside of each side. The piece of wood as a handle. The carrier can be made to hold any number of eggs and is held by a number of cotton-wool bands to carry.

Winter Feed for Poultry.

One of the best and most relished winter feeds for poultry is cabbage. Even though there be an abundance of other green vegetable matter, I should still strive to add some cabbage to the list. It is true that there is nothing quite so good for the hens as a growing crop such as rye, over which they can range and thus combine exercise with food getting, and every effort should be made to provide it, but often space is too limited for such crops and dependence must be had altogether on substitutes that can be stored away.

Look After Growing Chicks. The welfare of chickens must be looked after during the growing period, as no amount of pampering and petting at maturity will compensate for neglect then.

Report Will Once Vary Popular With English Residents—Is Not Rare West.

The chestnut hunt which the viceroy witnessed recently at Hyderabad reminds one that chestnut hunting was an extremely popular sport with Indian princes in former days, although the initiation of European forms of sport has done much in these times to rob it of its ancient vogue.

It was practiced both by Hindu and Mohammedan chieftains over the greater part of India, for the chestnut even now is a rare beast, and a century or so ago must have been common enough.

Another animal used in the same way by Indian nobles was a sort of lynx, spelled variously as "shoo-goos," "shagshuh." But this was used much more rarely than the chestnut. However, it was not only Indians who indulged in this form of sport.

It was enjoyed and practiced by Europeans as well in the days when they were content to abide in India for fifty years at a stretch and when they lived a Hindustani life in way unknown to modern times. More than one of the Company's nabobs kept their own chestnuts, which were frequently presents from friendly chiefs.

It may easily be imagined that chestnut hunting was very good sport and welcomed by the servants of the Company as an excellent substitute for the coursing which was familiar to them in England and which, like the chestnut hunt, has vanished before the spread of games such as tennis and golf—Madras Mail.

CHINAMAN WAS TOO CUTE

Suspicious of Wedding Cake Sent Him by Englishman Who Owed Him Money.

An Englishman who was appointed to an important post in China got married soon after. Among the recipients of the usual little card boxes containing a piece of wedding cake was a Chinese merchant with whom the bridegroom had an outstanding account for goods supplied.

After the honeymoon, the odd first persons the newly wedded husband met was his Celestial creditor. "And how did you like the cake?" said the Englishman, laughing, after the usual congratulations.

"Ah, ah," returned the Chinaman, with a cunning leer, "me no such big foot to eat him, sah. Me put cake in fire. Burn him up. He, he!" "Oh, that's too bad," said the Englishman, very much hurt. "You might have tasted it, at least, out of compliment to my wife and myself. Why didn't you?"

"Me too chut, sah," said the Celestial, with the same winning smile. "You owe me money, sah; sendee poison cake; I eat him! I die; you no payee up. Houp! He, he, he! I know you Inglesiah!"

Testing Coins.

"There goes another man suffering from degeneration of public manners," said the clerk in an aggrieved tone. "I gave him five pieces of silver in making change, and he tested every one of them to see if it was counterfeit right before my eyes. It is only lately that people who had no right to do that. Clerk always did it with coin that customers gave them, but that was a prerogative of the trade. For the customer to assume the same privilege is a usurpation of ancient rights. The worst of it is most people nowadays are pretty good judges of bad money, and every little while a coin is refused because it is counterfeit. The only way tradesmen can teach customers the respect due them is to turn their own backs when testing money. That has always been the custom in England. No tradesman over there would dare flip a coin under a customer's nose, and as a consequence no customer has ever taken that liberty with him."

Bruce and the Spider.

Apparently the little Bessie story about Bruce and the spider is in the category of fables. So eminent an authority as Sir Herbert Maxwell says in "Robert the Bruce":

"What is the evidence to be found in support of it? Not in the writings of Barbour, Fordun or Winton, those most nearly contemporary with Bruce and least likely to suppress and circumscribe so picturesque and illustrating an aptly the perseverance and patience of the national hero under desperate difficulties.

"No; nothing is heard of this adventure till long after Bruce and his comrades had passed away, and then it makes its appearance in a company with such trash as the miraculous appearance of the arm bone of St. Fillan on the eve of Bannockburn, and worthy of just about as much consideration."

So goes another of the venerated legends of childhood.

Stevenson's Kean Comment.

The hit that "Treasure Island" made is one of the most pleasant episodes in literary history. The story that Gladstone got a given of the book at Lord Rosebery's house, and the next day hunting over London for a second-hand copy, is good enough to be true. Stevenson's own comment on his success is treasured, if pointed out.

"This gives one strange thoughts of how very bad the common run of books that the wise men think too bad to print are the very ones that bring me praise and pudding."

Heroic Struggles of a Fat Man Who Thought the Scales Were Deceiving Him.

I have about come to the conclusion that the good Lord intended some of his creatures to be fat and some thin, regardless of medicines and so-called infallible cures, writes a western man for a long while I tried all the alleged obesity cures and none of them did me any good. Then I determined to starve myself and take lots of exercise.

All my life I had been a lover of good eating, and counted that day for day when I did not consume for my dinner the better part of a stein of steak as thick as a dork's foot, with all the trimmings. For breakfast I usually destroyed a platter of cakes, three eggs and no end of thin-sliced bacon, besides fruits and two cups of coffee.

This lifelong system I abandoned for an entire month, cutting out all the meat and about all the vegetables, a piece of toast and glass of milk taking the place of my morning meals and a little rice being the chief item on the meager dinner bill of fare. Lunch I omitted wholly. In addition I walked at least six miles every day and did all sorts of stunts in my room with a gymnastium outfit. Prior to going to bed I perpetrated all sorts of muscular contortions and rolled on the floor till my body was bruised. On the last of thirty days I felt fit to run a three-mile foot race and so in the ring with the champion. About this time it occurred to me that I ought to get weighed and I made a bee line for the scales. My grocer assured me that they were correct to an ounce, and they showed I had gained 11 pounds in the period of my abstemiousness.—Exchange.

PURE FOOD LAW NOT MODERN

Centuries Ago Tradesmen Who adulterated Goods Were Most Severely Punished.

Pure food laws are not quite so modern an invention as we may believe. Dr. Reisner has made discoveries in Palestine that seem to indicate some sort of supervision of the food supplies delivered to the palace nearly 3000 years ago. Labels have been found that were once affixed to "a jar of pure olive oil." We may wonder what tests were employed and what would happen to the man whose oil was found to be not pure. Probably something unpleasant, for there was no Supreme Court in those days.

We know what happened in the middle ages to the enterprising tradesman who adulterated his goods. In 1444 a Nuremberg merchant was burned alive for mating foreign material with his saffron and the saffron itself was used for fuel. Probably that artistic touch impressed the matter upon his memory.

Some Augsburg bakers who used false weights and bad flour were ducked in a muddy pool, and through a faulty knowledge of the human respiratory system, or sheer carelessness, they came to the surface dead.

In 1492 a wine merchant was ordered to drink six quarts of his own adulterated wine, and as he died soon after it is evident that the adulteration must have been serious. It is true that he had to finish the draft in a given number of minutes, and a small number at that, but in those days they had a pleasant way of weighing the scales and loading the dice upon the side of justice.

Civilization has changed all that. Nowadays we shiver with apprehension lest a rogue shall be punished.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Men and Women.

As time goes on we have the two results to be anticipated. Men reach the point—usually early in life—where business or politics absorb their whole attention, and they have little time, strength or interest left for the broader culture and the amenities of life, while women are prone to be too much preoccupied with these things, to the injury of the home—not, perhaps, in its smooth running, for in the average American home the wheels of its machinery do usually run smoothly, though at great expense and to the injury of the home spirit. If the two could be averaged we should more nearly approach the ideal. Men need more relaxation, more rest, more variety, especially as they advance in life. Women need more concentration, more definiteness in their work, and especially more interest and a different kind of ideal in their home-making.—Mrs. N. D. Hill in the American Woman and Her Home.

The Rothschilds.

What chiefly struck one at the funeral of the late Baron Gustave de Rothschild was the great multiplicity of relatives descended from his father, the first Baron James, the shrewd, the most funnily humorous member of the Paris branch of the Rothschilds, that he founded. Among their descendants were a son, grandsons, and great and great-grandsons—Rothschilds, Lamberts, Leoninos, Ephrussis, Sterns, Sassoons, Gubbays. They represented not only the principle of blood relationship, but the finance of the Paris branch of the Rothschilds, Bombay and Calcutta. Among the numerous multi-millionaires descended from the first Baron James there was one who devoted himself to medical science, dramatic literature and the collection of autographs of great writers—Baron Henri, only son of the second Baron James.

Cost of Adequate Nutrition for 29, 1-2 Cents a Day.

There has been a great deal of experimental horse feeding to determine the due proportions and best kinds of feed for working horses. The experiment stations of America and Europe have long been at this work of testing feeds, and according to the Indiana Farmer a recent test abroad has been made that seems to promise good results for the use of oats, corn, beans and other root crops.

It was found that by using corn in lieu of oats in the ration two pounds of corn were found equal to two pounds of oats, with the roots fed as part of the ration. When about four pounds of oats were replaced by roots in a ration of twenty pounds of feed, four pounds of oats, two pounds of dry matter in the roots proved equal to two pounds of dry matter in the oats. Such a change in the ration did not apparently produce any injurious effects on the health or working capacity of the horses. Whole straw and cut straw were found to be of equal feeding value, weight for weight, in rations for horses at work.

In a recent test of feeding horses at the Michigan station the feed was weighed out and each horse was given twenty pounds of hay per day and eleven pounds of oats. Three teams of farm horses were given a variety of feeds consisting of clover hay, corn stalks, cut straw, beet pulp, ear corn, oats, wheat, bran, carrots and a small percentage of oil cake. Each set of teams had practically the same amount of feed to perform and all kept in about the same condition that they were in when the experiment was begun. At the end of ten weeks the cost of feed for each set of horses was figured up, and it was found that the feed given the horses, oats and timothy hay, had cost 29 1-2 cents each set of teams, making a difference of 12 cents in cost for feed of each of the horses. In view of the short crops this season, these feeding tests are well worth considering for the winter's feeding.—Springfield Republican.

Foley Kidney Pills

always give satisfaction because they always do the work. J. T. Shelmut, Bremen, Ga., says: "I have used Foley Kidney Pills with great satisfaction and found more relief from catarrh of the bladder than any other kidney medicine, and I've tried almost all kinds. I can cheerfully recommend them to all sufferers for kidney and bladder trouble." For sale at Jones' drug store, Walton.

Durability of Farm Timber.

The Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station in some tests to determine the durability of farm timbers found that large posts usually last longer than small ones of the same wood, it makes no difference, says a report received by the Department of Agriculture, which end of the post is put in the ground, except that preference should be given to the sounder or larger end. In stiff clay soil the posts generally rot just beneath the surface of the ground where they are set, usually rot throughout the buried portion. Posts standing in constantly wet soil last longer than in soils which are merely wet and dry. Seasoning does not seem to have any marked effect on durability. Timber growing rapidly and in the open is not so good as the same variety growing in the woods. The evidence appears to show that it is not at all true that tree posts just as the tree begins to grow in early spring. The wood at the center of the tree is not so good as that just inside the sap wood. In the average lot of so-called first class posts on the market a number can usually be selected that are defective, though they may appear sound and firm. The defectiveness is usually indicated by a somewhat darker color or than normal, especially near the center of the tree.

Do not allow your kidney and bladder trouble to develop beyond the reach of medicine. Take Foley Kidney Pills. They give quick results and stop irregularities with surprising promptness.

ARE THEY AFRAID?

There are, in this neighborhood agents for several "bucket bowl" cream separators. "Bucket bowl" separators are the kind with wide mouth bowls, full of parts, set on top of their spindles. These agents say, to the farmers intending to buy a separator. "Look out for the Tubular," or "Don't try the Tubular," or "Beware of the Tubular." To hear them talk you would guess right away that is the best cream separator made, and that these "bucket bowl" fellows are afraid of it. And they are afraid of it. The Tubular surpasses every other separator in every particular, and you should take mighty good care you do see a Tubular before you buy a separator. We will be pleased to show you the latest Tubular and give you an illustrated catalog.

Are Rich in Starch and Fat, Better Than Potatoes and Almost as Good as Bread.

In France much attention is given to the propagating of the chestnut, and the fruit is spoken of with enthusiasm and respect. In French literature, especially in stories for children, the chestnut tree is quite as important a feature as the plum tree in the politics of this country, where we speak lightly of the chestnut and then pay at the rate of $5 a bushel for them. The small French chestnut is called the "châtaigne," but the large or giant chestnut is the "marron." The marron is cultivated extensively in France and Italy, where it is used in large quantities.

"Every soda fountain man," says the New York Soda Fountain, a trade journal, "has some reference to marrons, and marrons given are a favorite after-dinner morsel at all the larger hotels, yet few persons realize that while primarily a dessert delicacy, marrons are an exceedingly wholesome and valuable food. It is not generally known that the fruit of the chestnut tree is nearly as valuable as bread and more valuable than potatoes as a food, being rich in starch and fat."

In some districts of Pennsylvania much attention is now given to the planting of chestnut trees. There are several hill counties in Indiana, like Brown, Monroe and Morgan, where the marron and the smaller sized chestnuts could be made a source of profit.

MAKES A BIG DISCOVERY

Shorington Finds That Things Once Bemoaned May Prove Great Blessing.

"You know how opposites are attracted," said Mr. Shorington.

"When I was a younger man my very particular friend and chum was a chap who was six feet four, while I wasn't much more than four feet six. Despite the disparity in our dimensions we were the closest of friends, and as far as I was concerned there was only one thing that marred my otherwise complete happiness and that was that I could not be as tall as he. But the time came when I thought differently about that, and when in fact, he, instead of being proud of his altitude, wished only that he had been built on my more limited scale, and that was when in our later life we had both come to be afflicted with rheumatism."

"Then when I looked at him, racked with pain throughout his tall frame, I was glad that I was not tall but short; and when he reflected on the nearly two feet more of space in himself that the rheumatism had taken over he used to groan and wish that he had been built short like me."

"Isn't it singular how things come about? The things that at one time we may most bemoan may prove in the end our greatest blessing."

Wife Wins, as Usual.

"Of course, one can never win an argument with one's wife," remarked a broker the other day. "Even if I am perfectly right in his contention, the fates, or the postoffice department or something else will turn up to make it appear that the man is wrong." For instance, a few days ago my wife remarked that a letter in a plain envelope dropped in a letter box would be delivered even if it had no stamp. Of course I knew better, and told her so, but she was obstinate. Just to prove my contention when I was at the office the next day I drew a picture of a goose on a sheet of paper. Underneath the likeness I wrote: "Dear Madam: If you pay two cents to get this you are a goose." I put the sheet in a plain envelope and addressed it to my wife. The next morning the doorman rang furiously while I was still in bed. I waited for the wife or the maid to respond, but both had gone out. Finally I went to the door myself. There was a fool letter carrier with that crazy letter, and I had to dig down and pay the two cents postage due. If I had given the letter to my wife she would have been still more firmly convinced that she was right."

What He Remembered.

When a prospective voter in one of Chicago's election districts was asked the date of his naturalization he replied that he had taken out his papers so long before that he could not remember just when he had become an American.

The officer to whom this statement was made was extremely thoughtful for a moment. Then he added: "Can you remember who the Republican candidate for president that year?"

"Sure, I don't remember who was running for president," was the response, "but it was the same year that Stuffy McGinnis was appointed Dog Drover."

Common in New York.

The stranger in New York was startled by the clanging of an ambulance bell. The ambulance stopped at the side door of the hotel and the attendants hurriedly entered the building with their stretcher. But there was no crowd, no confusion.

"What's the excitement?" the stranger asked a native.

"There's no excitement," the latter replied. "A stage lion was shot a wealthy gentleman. That's all."

And he hurried along—Cleveland Dealer.

Conquered Club Man Caught in Attempt to Prove Superiority of His Mental Powers.

"At one of the clubs the other day two members were arguing about will power. The conquered man, who was in the habit of boring all present with his pointless tales, said that his will was stronger than his friend's."

"You are wrong there," said the quiet man, "and I will prove it in this way. You go outside and stand in the sun, and I will will you to come out of it. You will against me, and I bet you that I will have you from that corner before I have commanded you a second time."

The smart one took the bet, and put himself in the corner. The quiet man said in a commanding voice:—"Come out of that corner!"

The other grined and shook his head. The quiet man sat down and looked at him steadily. Five minutes passed, and then the man of will said, with a sneer:—"Hurry, you better give it up! I don't feel any influence at all, and I can't stand here all the evening."

"There is no hurry," said the quiet man, "and I have a very comfortable seat. There is no time limit except that you are to come out before I ask you twice, and as I don't intend to ask you again until this day week, I think you will feel the influence before then."

The smart one came out.

SWALLOWS ARE VERY BOLD

One Builds Nest in a House and Another Establishes Home on Electric Light Lamp.

A very curious instance of boldness in swallows was recorded in 1886 from Ceylon. In this case the birds built over a lamp in the dining room; what made their choice of site more remarkable was the fact that the lamp could be raised or lowered by counter weights and the connecting chains actually passed through the mud walls of the nest.

Occasionally the bird selects a nesting site which invites comparison with the boldness of the robin. In July last a pair of swallows took advantage of the open window of an unoccupied bedroom in a house at Falmouth in Bedfordshire to begin building their nest on the curtain rod of the bed.

The return of the owner of the house and his occupation of the bed did not in the least disturb or alarm the birds, which completed the nest and brought their nestlings within seven weeks of the house owner's return. They took no notice of the occupant of the bed when flying in and out of the window feeding their young; but the hen bird would fly off the nest if any one entered the room during the day.

Three years ago a pair of swallows built their nest on top of the shade of an electric lamp which hangs outside the asylum at Northborough, near Leicester.—Baily's Magazine.

Relics of Past Grace.

Nothing is too queer to happen in some corner of New York, says the press of that city. The other day a business woman took a room at what appeared to be an ordinary, small, quiet family hotel on West Fourth street, and, after her arrival she noticed a little old man sitting in the long hall which ran by the double parlors. Another man came downstairs and the little old man jumped up and joined him, and together they went into the back parlor.

Strolling down the hall she happened to look through the open door of the back parlor. There she saw the two men on their knees at a couch, fervently praying aloud. The business woman passed her hand across her brow. "Have I got 'em!" she murmured, "or have I got into the foolish house?"

Later she discovered that the hotel had in former years been a "home" connected with a church, and that although it long since passed under secular management some of the old-time brethren still haunt it.

Divorced by Candle.

If the marriage yoke rests uncomfortably upon a Burmese couple, a divorce may be quickly and inexpensively obtained, with a bit of excitement thrown in gratis. Husband and wife agreeing that life apart would present greater charms, the wife goes out and purchases two small candles, made especially for such occasions. These candles are exactly the same size, but each has some distinguishing mark, one being intended to represent the man, the other the woman. At exactly the same moment the candles are lighted, and the unhappy couple anxiously watches them burn. When one candle goes out the divorce is complete, but with one condition—the owner of the candle which has gone out must at once leave the house with nothing but the clothes worn at the moment. The other party remains in possession of the house and all therein.

His Connections.

The office boy for one of the largest financial houses in New York recently found a package of valuable papers. He promptly returned the property to its owner and was told he would be sent a suitable reward.

"And, by the way," said the grateful owner, "I don't mind if you, care of me," mentioning the name of the firm.

"Now," said the boy, "send it care of the Darling Dons Social club, No. East Fourteenth street."

Not for a generation has the Democratic party had such a prospect of being called to administer the Federal Government as it has at this time.

Neither in 1896 nor in 1892, as the Republican party so weak in organization, so discordant in sentiment, so divided upon policies, and undecided upon principles and doubtful of its leaders as it is to-day.

A "progressive" Republican in 1896 and in 1908 was voting the Democratic ticket; there was no recognition then of his being a Republican.

He would have been a white backbird in the flock and would have been ignored by his fellow Republicans.

Imagine for a moment the effect upon a Republican Convention of 1896 to 1908 of a speech against the trusts, a defiance to the money power or a proposition for Government ownership by a Republican Postmaster General.

That Republicans have progressed, have advanced, have cut away from their former tariff views and abandoned their financial ideas, that they have Orientalized their standpatters and are ready to put the bowstring to their former favorites, the Wall-street interests and the trusts, it is to be seen upon every hand in their political movements.

The transformation is so sudden, so radical, so astonishing to themselves and to the people that it has destroyed confidence of the voters in their sincerity and rendered in their own followers doubtful of party fortunes in their new uniforms and under a banner emblazoned with legends they were taught to condemn.

This change was forced upon them by the condemnation of the country.

That condemnation was shown by direct opposition at the polls or remaining from the polls and withholding electoral support by the former Republican voters.

Entrenched in power for 15 years, fortified by the political effects of a foreign war, wielding immense patronage in every department of the Federal Government, allied since its existence with the strong special interests, the Republican party found its own forces in revolt against its own record and its own measures.

Ready to denounce reactionaries, it is eager to don the armor of the progressives.

The Democrats in every township, ward, county, congressional district and state indeed, in the entire Union have before them the opportunity to defeat their political opponents, but they cannot do this through reactionary candidates nor representatives of the very interests that the Republicans are now discarding.

It was said by Daniel Drew, of an old-time Wall-street man, "His tech is financial death; and to-day with the aroused sentiment of the voters of the country, the touch of the interests, the suspicion of serving or being an ally, an attorney, a representative of the 'chevaliers of industry' who control the combines of trusts is political death to any candidate."

The nomination of such a one by the Democratic party in 1912 would blast the hopes of success of every candidate from top to bottom of the tickets.

The days of reactionaries, of bolters of progressive principles, of servants of the great trust corporations or favorites of the men who represent the allied interests, are over in politics. The opposition of the voters is only a question of time. The long records of faithful service to their clients that such candidates exhibit.

Fears of service for the interests are accepted now as years of service against the people.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Democratic politicians hostile to the hearty administration and favorable to the Third House at Frankfort continues to circulate reports that the Republican members of the Legislature will, in the coming year, support a bill which will make members of the Prison Board elective by the people instead of supporting the Governor. A 3-partisan board appointed by the Governor to administer the affairs of the prisons. The Evening Post rejects these reports, not only because they are untrue, but because they come, but because of the distinct pledge in the Republican platform. There may be, in the past analysis, few republican legislators willing to assist the Third House to pull its chestnuts out of the fire, but that the minority party as a whole can be used in this way is not possible.—Louisville Post.

BILL TO AID FAIRS.

Plan to Donate License Fees of Horses and Jacks in Each County.

Lexington.—A bill will be presented to the Legislature by Bluegrass horsemen which, if it passes, will mean rich prizes to be offered at the State Fair and the various county fairs of Kentucky for horses and jacks. The plan is to donate the season license fees of horses and jacks which now go into the county treasuries, to fairs to be offered as premiums for horses of the respective classes from which the fees are collected, and for jack stock and mules. The bill provides that the fees collected in each county shall go to the fair held in that county, and if no county fair is held it shall go to the State Fair.

The fees from thoroughbred stallions are to be applied to premiums for thoroughbred horses, those from trotting stallions to trotters, and those from saddle horses to saddle-horse classes, while the jack fees shall go to premiums for jacks and mules. The license fee for stallion horses is the amount of the charge for a service to the animal, and in some instances this amount is $1,000 or over. August Belmont charging $1,500 for service to his thoroughbred stallion, Rockland, which stands at his stock farm in this county.

This would make a magnificent premium list for the Bluegrass Fair, while with the fees in Jefferson county and the counties which have no fairs would give a still larger sum for the State Fair at Louisville. The horsemen say that as regular assessed taxes are paid on stallions and jacks, the license fees are in the nature of double taxation, and it is only just that the license money should come back to horsemen through the proposed medium.

Matt Cohen, the well-known saddle horse man, will head the delegation who will visit Frankfort to present the bill.

Henry C. Diers is the agent for the best light that has ever been offered to the public. It is a portable lamp, burns gasoline, is perfectly safe, and is far less expensive than coal oil. See it and you will buy it. It is better than an electric light and has 800 candle power.

Dr. Senour of Florence, entertained the North Kentucky Medical Society at its regular meeting last Wednesday night, those attending from Walton were Drs. B. K. Menefee, C. C. Rankin, J. G. Slater, and Robt. W. Jones, the latter taking the party over in his automobile.

Rev. H. C. Wayman, pastor of Walton Baptist church, has been quite ill the past week, and was unable to fill his pulpit at Walton last Sunday. Prof. J. G. Prather, who is ordained to preach, supplied Rev. Wayman's place, preaching excellent sermons morning and evening.

Mrs. L. P. VanLandingham has bought the Arnold property in Walton, from S. C. Hicks and Jno. L. Vest, who recently bought it from G. E. Rongher, of Covington. The property consists of a beautiful lot and a frame house on Main street. The consideration is said to be $1,500.00.

A. Kinsley Johnson, our clever rural mail carrier, is about to be out again after an illness of three weeks, during which time Rivolette P. DeMoisey faithfully discharged the duties of rural mail carrier, making the trip in the below zero weather when most of the R. F. Da. remained at home.

Chas. R. Strother, of Owen county, who has been in this quarter several months working up interest in the Owen, Dry Ridge and Covington Railroad, and selling considerable stock, has opened an office in the building of the Walton Bank Trust Company for the advantage of the railroad company, and also for the accommodation of his law practice, having been an attorney at the Owen county bar and a civil engineer.

Judge Strother is a good lawyer and a clever gentleman and ought to be able to make good in any line he undertakes.

Mrs. D. T. Buck and son Ernest J. Buck left Wednesday for Carrollton where they expect to take their future home, moving their household goods to Carrollton this week. Since Rev. D. T. Buck died his family have been contemplating a move to the new place.

Mr. Buck's family have been contemplating a move to the new place, and since Miss Fannie Buck married and moved to near Carrollton it was thought best to make this change. Mrs. Buck and her children are greatly loved by everybody about Walton because of their culture and refinement and their lovable and christian characters.

James Mahney, the engineer on the L. & N. Railroad, who was killed in a head-on collision last week between Frankfort and Louisville, was well known here and was one of the most popular engineers on that railroad. Four of his children were killed and twenty were injured in the crash.

Mr. Mahoney was 43 years old and lived at Walton years ago, and while boarding at the Snow Hotel many years ago. He had a remarkable career and the engines which he piloted in his many years of service, it is said, killed twenty-one persons accidentally.

His wife and his brave and fearless man and his kind and friendly nature have been anticipated for years.

An indication that the saddle horse business is not only keeping up but improving in prices, C. T. Best reports the sale of several fine horses made by C. Campbell, of Millersburg, Ky., owner of the Millersburg, King Chieftain. He sold to Geo. H. Easterbrook, Denver, Colorado, the three year old gelding Sanford Chieftain, for $1,000.

To J. R. Mosier & Co., of Jefferson City, Tennessee, a yearling colt Tennessee Chieftain for $400.

Arkansas, the yearling colt Robert E. Lee for $1,000. Boone county has some fine saddle horses and the above figures in the past week for fancy prices this year.

Chris Lunford and wife, who recently moved to Brookville, Indiana, were here and had the misfortune to have their home destroyed by fire last Saturday morning, and were forced out of the place.

The fire started in the kitchen, registering 32 degrees below zero. Kind neighbors assisted them to save everything but their clothes, and gave them the hospitality of their homes. Miller and the locked the doors of their store to respond to their distressed condition. Everything that could be done for their comfort was given promptly by Mr. and Mrs. Lunford were soon in another comfortable home of their own. They feel very grateful for the publication.

Geo. P. Nicholson, the enterprising contractor and builder, is progressing very nicely with the new residences of Miss Lula Jones and John C. Miller, and the Independence school house, notwithstanding the horrible weather he has had to combat the past month.

Misses Anna Cleek and Nannie Chambers chaperoned a merry party of young people from Walton to Ben Bristow's, Friday evening, and all had a good time. They came on a sleigh, that way of traveling always being enjoyed in snowy seasons.

About twenty-five guests responded to invitations by Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Utz and celebrated their father's, Mr. Ben Surface, birthday. It was an ideal winter day and Mr. Surface appreciated the kindness of all and the tokens of remembrance.

Mrs. Utz served dinner which consisted of all the delicacies of the season. Mr. and Mrs. Utz are noted for their true Kentucky hospitality. All wish Uncle Ben many, many happy returns of the day.

This community was much shocked by the death of Mrs. Albert Stephens, of Independence, Thursday morning. She had been in poor health for some time yet her death was unexpected.

She leaves a devoted husband and two bright little girls, besides a great many friends to mourn her death. The funeral was at the Christian church in Independence, Saturday morning, conducted by Rev. Runyan, of Latonia. Mrs. Stephens' life was as a beautiful lamp which cast its radiance all about us. Her Sunday school class of little boys sent a beautiful floral piece as a token of their love for her.

It was she who aided in organizing the Bible class at that church in which she did her duty. The bereaved family have our heartfelt sympathy.

Mrs. Lucy Carpenter has been quite sick at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. Hearne.

People living on the pike were seldom seen during the cold snaps, but they are beginning to show again.

Tilford Miller, who was sent to the pen for forgery from here and was released in September, returned here some days ago, broke into J. B. Jackson's store, securing four razors, entered the depot here, ransacked a passenger trunk and in some manner secured a letter of C. Boles containing a check. He went to the bank in Cincinnati, representing himself as Mr. Boles. The bank people know Mr. Boles and had Miller arrested, and he is now in Danversville with a chance to go where our legislators go out but in the same building.

Oscar Brown and Ida Green were Sunday guests of Charles Uttinger and family.

One of the most humorous events connected with the deep snow, was the sleigh ride last Sunday afternoon. Mr. Uttinger, Stella Brown and Anita Hempling. The joy the first few hours was beyond expression but their sleigh was broken, and they tried for about thirty minutes to discover and remedy the breakdown without success. Finally becoming discouraged, they decided it would be best to leave the sleigh and trudge home through the deep snow. Unhitching the horse and throwing the robes over him, Stella started home leading him, Anita following carrying the whip and cushion. Mrs. Utz reached home and told their troubles to Chas. Uttinger. From the explanation they gave of the breakdown he did not think the sleigh was broken, and the next morning, although there was snow on the ground, it was necessary to take Miss Anita and his son Charles to school in the buggy. On the way to school they had to pass the sleigh Mr. Uttinger examined the sleigh, trying to find where the trouble lay, and discovered that his supposition was correct, and his sleigh was in as good order as when it left home. Boys, if you want to go sleigh-riding don't ask Stella and Anita to take you.

The liquor interests have won a far-reaching victory in the United States Supreme Court by the class of little boys who carry beer, when offered for transportation into "dry countries" of another State. The decision of the court is particularly shipments from Indiana into Kentucky. The court held that beer and intoxicating liquors were legitimate commodities of commerce under the interstate law.

One of the nicest printed programs received at this office for some time is that of the Christian church, Tarkio, Mo., of which Rev. Miles Woodward Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Smith, of Erlanger, is pastor. It contains a picture of the church building as well as that of the handsome and able young pastor.

Quite a number of the Recorder's friends have entered the office in the last few days, giving the alarm and countersign according to the rules and regulations.

STOMACH TROUBLES

Cured By Vinol—Here is Proof

Seymour, Ind.—"I was troubled with a chronic stomach trouble, and five weeks ago it got so bad I had to give up work. I had tried various medicines without relief, and was finally induced to try Vinol. After taking the first bottle I was greatly benefited. Am now on the third bottle and ready to resume work. Am rapidly gaining in weight and strength." Edw. Nieman.

It is the curative medicinal elements of the code's livers, combined with the strengthening properties of tonic iron contained in Vinol which makes it so successful in restoring perfect digestion and at the same time it builds up the tired, overworked and run-down system.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you.

EXCELLENT AS ROOT CUTTER

Home-Made Alfalfa Proves Equally Effective as Fancy Priced Implement—How It Is Made.

I have a root cutter that I made which does the business just as well as one that would cost a fancy price. I am a writer in the Orange Judd Farmer. I can cut a bushel of roots in less than two minutes. Anyone handy with a saw and hammer can make one like it.

Make a box, a 2x10x12 inches. For the slide, b, use two pieces of inch boards 1 1/2 inches wide and 28 inches long. Make the knife, c, out of a piece of sheet iron sharpened on both sides. It should be two inches wide and 8 inches long. Nail sheet iron 8 inches wide on top of the slide frame and put the knife in place as shown. Fasten a, how made from the end of an old buggy shaft, as shown by d. Hinge it to the slide and fasten it to the handle, e, with a bolt. Nail two cleats on the side of the legs, as shown by f. The slide will operate on these.

WATERING COWS IN THE BARN

Successful Dairyman Rigs Up Portable Tank, Large Enough for Three Animals to Drink.

A successful dairyman recently outlined to us his method of watering the cows in the barn, says the Ohio Farmer. He objected to using the long, continuous feed trough for watering, his objections being that there will be in the process considerable evaporation into the atmosphere of the barn. Damp air in the barn means that it will be chilly. The evaporation from the gutters and radiation from the cows saturate the air more than it should be without any further addition from the trough.

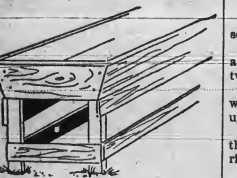

To overcome that objection and yet provide a means of watering in the stall he had rigged a trough on low wheels. This movable tank was so constructed that it would run nicely above the continuous feed trough. In that way the cows can be watered in a very short while without being loosened from their stalls. The tank was made long enough so that three cows could drink at a time. A man may be sweeping the feedway at the same time or doing other work while moving this tank cart from time to time.

HOMEMADE FEEDING TROUGH

Easily and Cheaply Constructed by Using Common Lumber—Excellent for Giving Roughage.

A good trough is easily and cheaply constructed by using 2x4s, 4 feet long for corner posts set 2 feet apart, and a 4-inch trough 1 foot from the ground, using twelve 2-inch boards for the bottom of trough.

Common 6-inch fencing boards serve for the slats, set 8 inches apart;

Home-Made Feeding Trough.

thus each sheep has 4 inches of feeding space, and thirty sheep may feed at a 14-foot trough. Roughage will feed nicely from this trough.

Should Get Separator.

A farmer who lives too far from a good market for whole milk should get a separator. He should feed the skimmed milk to the pigs and calves. Not only does a separator save labor for the women folk, but also for the men. And the returns are greater in the long run than if the whole milk was sold.

Frozen Pumpkins No Good.

Pumpkins will freeze if you don't watch out and frozen pumpkins are of no good to anything. Good, ripe, sound pumpkins are enjoyed by the cows and help the milk flow very much.

Variety of Feeds.

A variety of feed for cows will tend to correct bad flavors and other objectionable features of certain kinds of feeds, such as turnips, oil meal and

FEW RECORD-BREAKING COWS

Remarkable Strides Made by Dairy Cattle During Past Half Dozen Years—Few Results.

It would startle a dairyman of 40 years ago to look at some of the records established recently by leading dairy breeds in America. Then a cow that would produce 27,482 pounds milk in a year would have been considered as prosperous as the old world looked upon Columbus' idea of the earth being round. However, Colantha 4th Johanna, the famous Holstein cow, produced that amount of milk under careful supervision. It tested 8.64 per cent butter fat, being a total of 998 pounds butter fat for the year.

Another Holstein, Lunde Koradyke, was a close second, with 26,192 pounds milk to her credit for a year, which tested 9.32 per cent, or a total of 872 pounds butter fat.

However, all good cows are not Holsteins. Readers will recall the remarkable record of the Guernsey cow, Dolly Dimple. She produced 18,808 pounds milk in a year which tested out 8.75 per cent.

Jersey breeders have something to brag about. Jacoba Irene produced 17,253 pounds milk in a year, which yielded 952 pounds butter fat. Another Jersey cow, Olga 4th's Pride, gave 16,275 pounds milk, producing 871 pounds butter fat in a year. A third Jersey, Sophie 19th, while giving only 14,372 pounds milk, made 854 pounds butter fat. There are a half dozen or more well-known Jersey cows that have exceeded the 800-pound mark for butter fat in 365 days. When the average farmer gets a cow that he thinks he has some thing to brag about.

Then again, Ayrshires are not to be ignored. Netherland Browne 9th, an Jersey Heifer.

Ayrshire cow, has a record of 18,110 pounds milk which produced 820 pounds butter fat.

Other breeds like Brown Swiss and the dairy strain of Shorthorn have interesting records back of them. When a dairyman gets out of sorts with the world and thinks little progress is being made let him contemplate some of these facts and note the really remarkable strides dairy cattle breeding has experienced the past half dozen years.

Cleaning the Separator.

In cleaning the separator be sure to see that the parts are dried rapidly so they will not rust; stick a drying should not be done with a cloth, as much lint will be left, and on this will be large number of bacteria. Boiling water will cause the parts to dry rapidly and evenly, and will be death to many of the bacteria.

Records Are Essential.

It is impossible to build up and maintain a dairy herd except through discriminating selection, and this can only be attained where careful records are kept and a high standard of excellence sought.

Test for Quality.

When you test your cows for quantity, you must also test for quality in order to determine definite results. Some cows give a greater per cent of butter fat than others.

DAIRY NOTES

The dairy increases the crop yield. As a selling crop for milk and brood sows alfalfa is superior to the clovers. Three feeds a day for the new calf are better than the same amount in two feeds.

Doesn't it look as though the cows would never get enough when hay is up to $15 or $18?

Why not find out just how many of the herd are borbards, and then get rid of the borbards?

Sometimes it is well to improve the man with the cows while working for improvement among the cows.

Why should the horse be curried and brushed any more than the cow that produces a part of what we eat? Cows giving milk should have one quart of corn cob and one quart of wheat bran mixed with the cut fodder three times a day.

If you have six cows and no separator sell one of the cows and buy a separator. You will save work and make money by the deal.

Selecting the best heifer calves from the best cows and keeping a first-class sire, are methods of building up a dairy herd within the reach of all of us.

One of our dairy farmers writes that he has been keeping some records and finds that since feeding silage his profits have increased about 30 per cent.

A canvas or oilcloth cover for the separator is one of the little things that helps keep the machine in good running order and prolongs its usefulness.

Two pounds of butter will soon be worth as much as a bushel of wheat. One way of increasing profits in many dairy herds would be to sell some of the cows for beef.

TOBACCO SALES

Good Prices Prevail At All The Loose Leaf Warehouses Over the State.

Louisville, Jan. 25.—The local leaf tobacco market today was one of the best in point of activity and strength witnessed in the local breaks in several years. All warehouses held sales, and over 1,000 hogheads were disposed of, the percentage of real choice tobacco was larger than at any time this season; buyers were out in full force and at times the bidding was extremely keen. Liggett & Myers, P. Lorillard and the American Tobacco Company led in the bidding, while a number of smaller buyers displayed considerable activity. Prices ran as high as $38.20, only $5.00 below the best price for the season in the local market, and a large number of hogheads brought better than $36.

Hopkinsville, Jan. 27.—This tobacco market was busy in every department last week. There was some slight movement of old tobacco, deliveries of loose tobacco were heavy each day, loose sales were good, prices were decidedly bullish and the demand seemed stronger than at any time since the season opened. In a very large degree this was due to the favorable weather that continued throughout the week, permitting the farmers to deliver their tobacco in better condition, as a rule, than has been the case for a month or more.

Mayesville, Jan. 29.—Today's loose leaf tobacco market was stronger than usual, with prices ruling high on all color grades, the demand being specially strong on this class of tobacco. Averages were higher, being $9.31 a hundred on day's sale at both houses. The average at the Farmers' House was $11.15. Total sales amounted to 266,660 pounds selling at $3 to $30 a hundred. Offerings were above medium while receipts were heavy, the weather being right to handle the weed.

Shelbyville, Jan. 29.—Receipts on the loose leaf market today were heavier and prices much stronger on all clean tobaccos. The Shelby house sold 122,000 pounds at prices ranging from $3 to $26 a hundred. The Burley house sold 40,000 from $3 to $23, making the best general average of the season.

Carlisle, Jan. 29.—Prices on the loose leaf tobacco market here ruled the highest of the season to-day, with an active demand for all grades, and a running price of $2.60 for common sweepings to $25 for bright leaf. Two hundred thousand pounds were sold.

Lexington, Jan. 29.—About 600,000 pounds of loose leaf Burley tobacco were sold on the breaks here to-day at 12 cents. A fancy crop of 5,000 pounds grown by Steele & Turner, of Woodford county, brought 30 cents.

Richmond, Jan. 29.—Loose leaf sales opened today with both bright and dark grades, ranging from $3 to $27 a hundred averaging a net of $12.

LESS FOOD WITH PLENTY OF FRESH AIR

In Combination With a Cheerful Spirit Will Keep Colds and Pneumonia Away.

It is a fact well known to physicians, and by all careful persons, who undertake to fortify themselves against lagrippe, pneumonia, bronchitis or common colds by the promiscuous use of any kind of food, are making a dangerous mistake. Rich, red blood, unclogged by stimulants is the best defense against disease. And the question how to fill one's veins with this important fluid leads directly to the matter of diet and air.

According to the best physicians two things come into play with all others to common cold-bronchitis and pneumonia bad ventilation and overheating. A stomach overloaded with food, is almost certain to get more or less out of order and to distill into the system certain poisonous substances which lower the defensive power, somewhat as thick mud in a stream would lessen its efficiency in driving a mill wheel. Bad air produces a similar effect and the two in combination make a fertile field for the germs of pulmonary ailments to do their work of death.

Especially, let the fresh air in, keep up your courage and wear a smile! is the advice of physical culture experts, and it is believed to be more valuable in a general way than a car load of medicine.

Flying Men Fall

victims to stomach, liver and kidney troubles—just like other people, with lack of sense, loss of appetite, backache, and tired, listless, run-down feeling. But there's no need to feel like that as T. D. Beebe, Henry, Tenn., proved. "Six bottles of Electric Bitters" he writes, "did more to give me new strength and good appetite than all other stomach medicine I used." So they help everybody. It is folly to suffer when this great remedy will help you from the first dose. Try it. Only 50 cents at all dealers.

DON'T SAY YOU'RE OLD

You Only Feel Old

Digestive organs are weak—don't assimilate food as they used to. Other organs act more slowly and less effectively.

Blood is thin and sluggish. Renewal of strength does not equal the wear and tear of your system.

That's what makes you feel old. Nothing in the world will come up and invigorate those weak, back-lagging organs, make rich blood and create strength so quickly as Vinol.

Vinol is not a secret nostrum, simply the medicinal elements of the cods' livers, with the useless nauseating oil eliminated, and tonic for added. Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not make you stronger, feel younger and give you an added interest in life.

TO TAME AUTOS

Senator Newcomb Offers Draconic Measure in The Senate On the Subject.

A drastic bill regulating the speed and license fee of autos and fixing the liability of owners in case of accidents, was introduced in the Senate. The measure was introduced by Senator Herman D. Newcomb of Louisville, and provides that an auto must stop when approaching a horse on the highway. This is a point derived from the present Virginia law.

This is a most drastic measure and completely revolutionizes the present automobile law. It raises present schedule of State licenses from $5, $10 and $25 to $10, $25 and $100. One of the most drastic features of the bill is the provision making the owner of the machine criminally and civilly liable, whether he was present or not, in case of a collision. The bill also changes the law of evidence and places the burden of proof on the chauffeur or operator of the machine. The speed limit is fixed at eight miles per hour in cities and twenty miles per hour in the country. In every case of accident the owner may be proceeded against as well as the chauffeur. The bill also carries the provision of the Virginia law, providing that whenever a horse is approaching a full stop and the chauffeur lead the horse past the machine.

President Taft, in his recent speech in New York, used these words: "The people are not always able to decide what is best for them. A great many men who believe they are to be true, lack the courage to say it. In explaining that the people do not always know what they want the President made no mention of the fact that the people do not always have a chance, under the present cumbersome election methods, to give expression to their opinion. The people, for instance, probably would not be in favor of allowing hundreds of office holding Republicans in the South to nominate the candidate for President, but how can they help themselves? Moreover, under the people decide almost unanimously that they want a certain thing, such as the recall in Arizona, the President steps in and says they shall not have it. When both Houses of Congress pass a bill revising the tax on woollen downward, the Freewheelers make that legislation impossible with his vote. Apparently it makes small difference to Mr. Taft whether the people know what they want or not.

As every cold weakens the lungs, lowers the vitality and paves the way for the more serious diseases that are making a fearful record. The fact that the politicians of both parties in the State are opposed to the primary election bill that has been introduced in the General Assembly, is a strong reason which it should become a law. The politicians have been a serious draw back to Kentucky for several years, and law that is calculated to take political affairs out of their hands and return them to the people, is badly needed in Kentucky. About two-thirds of the letters written represent a waste of time.

"LIMIT" IN SHORT WEIGHTS

Indianapolis Man Finds Dumbbell That Is Four Ounces Less Than It Is Branded.

Dr. W. F. King, assistant secretary of the state board of health, has found what he terms a "limit" in short weights. He wrote to a sporting goods house a few days ago to buy some dumbbells for his daughter, and in "hitting" a pair found that one was lighter than the other. He called the attention of the salesman to his discovery and the dumbbells were placed on a balance and weighed, and one found to be four ounces short of the branded weight.

"I don't believe the misbranding could be handled under the pure food law," said Dr. King, "but I don't know what might take the case to court. Dr. King recalled that when Ben-Hur was a slave on the Roman galley he represented to the overseer that keeping a galley slave chained to one side of the ship all the time developed him on one side only and that the owner was not able to get the value received from his price for the slave, and that as a result the slaves were shifted regularly from one side of the ship to the other. In this way, Ben-Hur was enabled to maintain rugged health and strength until he escaped. "Since dumbbells are used for physical development, a pair ought to be of equal weight, in order to balance the development," said Dr. King.—Indianapolis News.

HIPPO ATE A MINCE PIE

But Bill Snyder, the Keeper, Said the Confection Was Wasted on Miss Murphy.

It is throwing money away, according to Bill Snyder, head keeper of the Central park menagerie, to feed a hippo on pies, especially on the mince variety. This observation by the keeper was elicited after he had tossed a beautiful mince pie into the yawning mouth of Miss Murphy, one of the hippos in the menagerie.

The hippo had been promised the pie by a man on the upper West side fully a week ago. He said he wanted "the kids" to have a laugh. When Miss Murphy gulped the pie down yesterday more than a score of persons, as well as "the kids," laughed. It was a conventional 30 cent pie, but Miss Murphy looked more important than 30 cents when she began to crush the delicacy in her sawing jaws. According to the man who carried the pie to the menagerie he had soaked it well in brandy. He was accompanied by a woman. Snyder tickled the hippo's chin with the edge of the pie, and as she opened her mouth, he sent the whole thing in at once, as if it were a straw hat. "Some bugs in this town!" said the keeper. "A woman came here yesterday and wanted to know if she could get a permit to give the lions catnip."

Spice of Life.

One way of ironing out domestic difficulties was originated by the late Vaughan Kester, author of "The Prodigal Judge." He was living at Gunston, an old colonial estate on the Potomac, not far from Mount Vernon, with his wife, an aunt of Paul Winch, who made the dramatic version of "The Sign of the Cross" and the constitution and by-laws of the Mutual Help association, retails the New York Sun, in mentioning the incident.

"Everybody's business but my own," was the motto of the association. Under the head, "Declaration of Purpose," appeared this paragraph: "The members of this association, recognizing that there are realms of indecision and irresolution difficult for the single mind to grasp, penetrate and fully explore, have formed an association for the specific purpose that the individual members may have the advantage of every other member's opinion on all conceivable questions affecting his or her personal welfare, believing that by so doing they will add the variety which is the spice of life."

Telegram That Saved India.

In connection with the Durbar, a museum of Mogul relics has been arranged, which contains, among other objects, the telegram which illustrates Montgomery's great saying, "The electric telegraph saved India." This is the famous telegram dispatched by Barendsen on May 11th, 1857, which gave the news of the rebellion to the north of India, and enabled Lawrence and Edwards and Nicholson to take steps for the disarmament of regiments on the verge of revolt, and to make those of the arrangements for the relief of Delhi by which—and probably by which alone—the mutiny was crushed out, and Delhi once more returned to her British allegiance.

Disgusted Old Columbus.

Columbus deftly stood the egg on end, then waited for the applause. "That's all right enough," said the audience, "but show us how to buy a really fresh egg."

Uncle Rastberry walked into a drug store, and "Gimme one o' dem plasters for my back," he said. "One of the porous plasters?" "No, I don't want one o' de porous plasters. I want one o' de best,"—Atlanta Journal.

CANARY AN ARDENT MOTORIST

Atlanta Man Has a Bird That Has Traveled More Than 20,000 Miles in Automobile.

Many dogs and cats regularly receive their share in motor cars and have shown distinct preferences for these rides, but a canary bird is the latest addition to the ranks of motorists. Dick Lovi of Atlanta, Ga., is the particular canary that has the distinction of being the first in this field and he is said to have traveled over twenty thousand miles in a motor car. J. E. Lovi of Atlanta tells an interesting story of Dick. Dick's first ride in an automobile was in a Premier 34, bought by Mr. Lovi in Philadelphia in 1906. Dick was one year old at that time, and with Mr. and Mrs. Lovi his mileage around Philadelphia, including several trips to Boston, was ten thousand miles.

The three motorists made a trip of twelve hundred miles from Boston to Atlanta in October, 1906, being the first to cover this route in a motor car. They went by way of Baltimore and Philadelphia over the mountains, along the Southern railway. On several occasions they were out all night in their car, sleeping by the roadside. Mr. Lovi says they spent three weeks in a constant run during this trip, all the time running on low gear. Mr. Lovi is almost always accompanied by Mrs. Lovi, who is an expert at the wheel of a car, and Dick is always the third member of the party. He has become so enamored of motoring that they are afraid to leave him at home for fear that he will do himself bodily injury. Motoring apparently appeals to him, as he is extremely hardy and a great singer. Besides his motoring he has made three trips to the Pacific coast and return by train. Mr. and Mrs. Lovi would part with him under no conditions, an offer of $250 having been refused. It is said.

STRANGE KINGDOM OF NEPAL

Secluded Land at Foot of the Himalayas Where King George Went Hunting.

The ancient and interesting little kingdom at the foot of the Himalayas to which the king went for his shoot is nearer to being an independent territory than any other of the Indian states.

Since the eighteenth century it has been ruled by the Gurkhas, who furnish to the Indian army some of the most perfect soldiers in the world. For practical purposes the country is almost as closely secluded from Europeans as Tibet, to which in many respects it is akin.

The Terai, where King George was lately camped, is the low-lying jungle tract bordering on the Indian plain, a region extraordinarily rich in wild animals, including elephants, the capture of which is a highly organized and valuable industry.

The maharaja of Nepal, whose death by the way occurred on December 11, was a Hindu sovereign only, the real ruler being the hereditary prime minister, who visited England a few months ago. He has the title of maharaja, and is entitled to a salute of nineteen guns.

One result of the jealous exclusion of foreigners, which the Indian government thoroughly respects, is that very little is known of a great part of Nepal, and that much of the available information as to social and economic conditions is mere guesswork. For close upon a hundred years the rulers have been our very good friends, and the force of eight thousand men headed by Jung Bahadur in the Mutiny was of inestimable service.—Westminster Gazette.

State Will Not Pay Tips.

The anti-tipping campaign started by commercial travelers has enlisted a powerful recruit in W. E. Davis, state auditor of Kansas. Mr. Davis has decreed that Kansas-state officials, when traveling on the state's business, are not entitled to charge the public for tips paid. It cost Kansas just $3,000 in 1911 for tips distributed by state officials, and Mr. Davis has issued a set of rules for the benefit of employees who travel for the state, in which he says: "Tips or gratuities are recognitions of special service, not an actual and necessary expense for the service itself and will not be allowed." The controller of the treasury of the United States, on the other hand, has ruled that tips are a necessary incident of travel and are properly collectible from the public funds.

Value of History.

Old wrongs are so hard to root up that every man sometimes becomes impatient and indignant and rebellious, except the man who knows and has long pondered in the very slow ascent of human society to a higher level that it has reached. Historical knowledge is got only by considerable labor. Any good man who looks his fellows, when he looks out over the world and sees it as it is, is pretty certain at times to accept some reform theory unless he has a pretty good historical perspective.—World's Work.

Preverb Amplified.

"The pen," said the ready-made philosopher, "is mightier than the sword." "So it is," replied the Chicago beef baron, "especially if you have reference to a cattle pen."

CLAIMS OLE BULL'S ISLAND

Estate Was Bequeathed to a Swiss Child by the Famous Violinist's Daughter.

Ralph S. Bartlett, who was counsel for Mrs. Olea Bull Vaughan, only child of the late Ole Bull, the famous violinist, successfully contested the will of Mrs. Bull in the probate court of York county, Maine, last summer, recently left on board the steamship Franconia for Liverpool on his way to Mrs. Vaughan's will at Bergen, Norway, the New York Herald's Boston correspondent says.

Mr. Bartlett is executor for the will of Mrs. Vaughan, and he and Miss Amelia Shapleigh of West Lebanon, Me., are co-trustees for Sylvia Vaughan, the adopted daughter of Mrs. Vaughan and the principal beneficiary under Mrs. Vaughan's will. The result of the will of Mrs. Vaughan is to be offered for record in Bergen is that the only foreign real estate which she possessed is the island of Lysoen, near Bergen. Ole Bull owned this island, which is said to be one of the most beautiful in the world, a matter of about six miles from Bergen, and consists of about seven-hundred acres of land, largely forest. Ole Bull in his lifetime developed two fresh water lakes and a cave and laid out twenty miles of paths on the island. The estate was left by Mrs. Vaughan to the little Sylvia girl, Sylvia, whom she adopted a couple of years ago, but on Sylvia's death Lysoen is to be preserved by the Norwegian government as a memorial to Ole Bull.

The exact procedure which will be followed in Norway with respect to the case is a matter of uncertainty, because under the Norwegian law no foreigner can own real estate in that country without the written consent of the king.

WHEN LANDIS WAS NAMED

Brother of Judge Tells How He Came to Be Called Keneasaw Mountain.

"The most memorable Christmas I ever spent was during the war," said former Representative Landis of Indiana at the Willard. "My father had returned from the war on leave of absence to find another son. He had taken part in the fight at Keneasaw mountain, and when he found his heir awaiting him he suggested the name Keneasaw Mountain. That is how my brother, who has become more or less noted as a judge, came to be named."

"But it was not that incident that made my Christmas so memorable. Keneasaw was a baby. I had other brothers. We were living a few miles from a small town in Indiana, and my father had only a few days' leave. He was compelled to rejoin his regiment before Christmas. If I remember correctly—

"I shall never forget the day before that Christmas. My father and mother went to town, and the boys naturally were much excited. When mother came back with a bundle we were more excited. It turned out that father had purchased us some gifts. Mine was a candy camel. The other boys had similar gifts. I had great appreciation of that camel. I placed him affectionally on the 'what-not' of the best room, and took many pilgrimages to have a look at him. Of course, I caressed him, and now and then I would take a loving lick. For several days following Christmas my camel remained there, but one day I could not resist the temptation, and, turning carnivorous, I devoured my animal. I do not know what the other boys did with their animals, but I suppose they went the same way that mine did."—Washington Post.

Heine did not Like London.

Heine did not like London, but the London county council likes Heine, for the passer-by is now reminded by the usual exclamation that the poet once lived in Craven street, Strand. As he looked out of his lodging Heine exclaimed, "Send a philosopher to London, but no poet. This downright earnestness of all things; this colossal uniformity, this machine-like movement, this moroseness even in pleasure, this exacting not London smother the imagination and rends the heart." But if Heine did not love London he found something within easy reach to warm the imagination and fire the heart—the chalk cliffs of Ramsgate in mid-June, with a beautiful Irish girl to assist in the process.

A New Kind of Exercise.

It is a morning exercise invented by a Parisian, a man, who takes the fragments of a broken vase. The fragments are thrown upon the floor in a thousand pieces. Then she gets up and collects those pieces, and the point is that not a fragment is lost. For this is the new way of gardening—the stooping cure that is recommended by every doctor. You can do it in your home, and it requires no garden. It is only to buy the morning paper, tear it into fragments, chuck them on the floor, and pick them up. Quite as good as gardening.

Aerial Postal Service in Italy.

Italy is the latest country to try an aerial postal service. The Italian aeronaut Dal Mistro recently carried a sack of mail between the Bologna and Venice postoffices in a Duplestano monoplane, covering the distance of 101 miles in one hour and twenty-eight minutes.

Rev. Milton J. Hoover, several years ago pastor of Burlington Baptist church, has been elected Division Supt. of Schools for the city of Williamsburg and county of James City, Virginia, his old home. Rev. Hoover's numerous Kentucky friends extend congratulations.

There were 23 pupils examined last Friday and Saturday for passing to the High School. The result has not been reported yet.

Mrs. James D. Acers, of Locust Grove neighborhood, fell on the ice, last Tuesday morning, breaking one of her wrists.

The box social advertised for the 3d inst, has been postponed indefinitely.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Gaines went to the city, yesterday.

Representative Chas. Knight, of Louisville, will introduce a resolution in the House this week, condemning the practice of legislators junketing at the expense of the State. He says he cannot see the necessity for Representatives and Senators journeying to Eddyville, Hopkinsville, Bowling Green, Richmond and various other points throughout the State for a cursory inspection of State institutions. These trips, during a legislative session, cost the State close to $1,000 or $1,500, without real results being obtained in most instances. Of course if the management of an institution is under investigation, it might be well for a committee of three or four to be named to go through that institution, with a view of ascertaining whether it is being properly conducted but there is no excuse for a score or more of the legislators making the trip.

Taking a Chance

"It's little less than outrageous, Lee, for you to squander your hard-earned money on a worthless lottery ticket," said Leslie's wife in a burst of indignation. "I haven't heard of anyone being so shallow-brained in years."

"Never mind, if $1173 wins you'll be able to buy all the luxuries your little heart craves for and I've always desired you to have. Don't be too skeptical but—wait—"

"I'd prefer any day to have the two dollars you've wasted for some real necessities instead of imaginary luxuries. A pair of gloves, a rug for the hall, silk for a waist, and a thousand such one things."

"Let's not quarrel over the money until we get it," broke in her husband. After the above conversation Mrs. Leslie tried to forget all about the lottery ticket, but impossible.

Meanwhile her husband, occupied with the cares of business, had forgotten completely about the little blue ticket. Matters of much greater importance occupied his mind.

"Belinda," he said one night, "the bills for the last month are simply enormous. My income does not warrant these expenditures. There's more money going out than coming in. I'm neither parsimonious, miserly nor stingy, but there's a limit to all extravagance."

For once Mrs. Leslie was silent; she simply smiled and kept on sewing. When she looked up she was startled to notice the silver tines to her husband's hair, how tired and old he looked, while she seemed to grow more youthful in appearance every day.

"Don't you feel well," she questioned, anxiously.

"Can a man feel well and happy?" was his curt answer, "when he's continually harassed with financial troubles?"

The wife, wishing to end the discussion, proposed that they go to the "nickel show."

"Astounding that you did not engage a box at the opera," grumbled her husband as he assented.

Mrs. Leslie finally threw all caution to the winds. She seemed to have been bewitched by the "demon of buy." The old portieres in the little parlor were replaced by elegant new ones, which made the parlor carpet appear so shabby in contrast that it was not long before a new rug adorned the floor.

The comments of their friends were numerous. When they noticed the mahogany bookcases and the piano which had been purchased on the installment plan, Mrs. Leslie expected to pay for when the lottery money was distributed. "Mr. Leslie must have made a great deal of money," they said.

After three months of apprehension and anxiety Mr. Leslie gave vent to his pent-up feelings. Opening the new-rugged desk to look for a pencil, he burst forth in a voice of anger, disappointment and exasperation. "Billie, billie, that's the only kind of correspondence in this house nowadays. None of them receipted either. I'll have to borrow money on my life insurance if this continues."

"Yes," answered Mrs. Leslie with tears in her eyes. But I figure it will be all right if we only have a little patience."

"What do you mean?"

"It's rather inconvenient just now, but I fancy it will be all right when your lottery ticket comes due. Didn't you maintain vociferously that the lottery money would eventually pay for everything. Maybe then you can take a vacation and rest up a little."

"What cognage of your brain are these vivid imaginations?" said Mr. Leslie as he sprang to his feet, giving his wife one long look as if he had never seen her before. After a tense silence which seemed aged to his wife, he exclaimed, "The lottery money! What do you mean? I suppose it's a woman's prerogative to change her mind, but didn't you distinctly assert that you wouldn't touch one penny of that money?"

"Yes, but—"

"That's the reason why I never took the trouble to inform you that the drawing was weeks ago and our number was not among the lucky ones."

Mrs. Leslie turned pale. "What a foolish woman I've been," she said. "I thought so much about it that I didn't realize we could lose."

"Mother," called a sweet, young voice, "where are you? I've some wonderful, glorious news to tell you."

"What is it, dear?" she asked, as a young girl entered the room.

"Don't look so gloomy, mother mine," she replied, as she wound her arms around her mother's neck. "Billie Thorpe is coming tomorrow to ask father's consent to our wedding. Oh, I'm deliciously happy."

"I was not prepared for this great surprise, my dear, I didn't know he was even courting you," said her father.

"Oh, he's been coming here all winter. He said the parlor was so comfortable he simply couldn't stay away."

"Leslie," said Mrs. Leslie, taking her husband's hand, "this was a good investment never achieved. Of evil good has come, as Billie, who is my ideal of perfection in a young man, hadn't enjoyed our pretty parlor and felt the atmosphere of affluence around him, never have proposed to our daughter."

THIS KIND OF FARMING PAYS

Ohio Farmer Raises 163 Bushels of Corn Per Acre by Using Plenty of Manure and Good Seed.

On a recent trip through northwest Ohio instructors from the College of Agriculture, Ohio State University, met a farmer, Mr. S. A. Luthy of Swanton, who said that this last year he had raised 4,400 bushels of corn on 27 acres, or nearly 163 bushels per acre. He did not state how this corn was measured, says the American Cultivator. When asked to tell how he had produced this big yield he said: "Plenty of manure and fertilizers, good seed, good drainage." He keeps a herd of registered Holstein cows, and all the manure is kept under a shed and well tramped down to prevent burning until ready to be hauled out. Raw rock phosphate is used to reinforce the manure and add phosphorus to the land. The seed corn was plant-selected in the fall and stored in a well-ventilated room without artificial heat. When tested last spring it showed perfect germination, and it gave what Mr. Luthy called "a perfect stand." This, he claimed, had a great deal to do with the big yield. His land is well drained, having lines of the four rods apart all over the farm. Four-inch tile is used placed from three to four feet deep. From his conversation it was gathered that Mr. Luthy was putting into practice the teachings of the college of agriculture.

GREAT AID TO THE GRUBBER

Virginia Man Has Invented Instrument With Powerful Lever Which Is Quite Effective.

(By W. B. LENTZ.)

If there is any way on earth by which grubbing can be made easy, we have never heard of it, but the following will help some. We know of no harder work than grubbing up bushes and trees.

A Virginia man has invented an instrument with a powerful lever, which has been found on trial to be quite effective in uprooting small trees. It acts a good deal as a dentist's forceps, only instead of a straight pull, which the dentist uses, it gives a side pull, by the use of a long handle forming the lever. The arm is rigidly attached to the base and the arm has at the end a strong jaw, capable of withstanding a great strain. On the end of the lever is another jaw co-operating with the first. The instrument is thrust close to the roots of a bush, the stem of which is set between the two jaws and a pull on the lever brings it up by the roots.

GOOD ROADS & FARM NOTES

Single crop and grain farming must be replaced by a diversified system. Probably the great majority of soils will not be benefited by an application of lime.

The cow, the pig and the hen are a great trio that can scarcely fail to bring success.

There is only one sure way of determining whether a soil needs lime, and that is by trial.

The three essential fertilizing constituents of soils are nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash.

In applying lime to soils it should be remembered that not all soils are benefited by such applications.

Do not pile manure around the barn and do not pile it in the fields. Spread it as fast as it can be taken out.

The requirements for rhubarb are a rich soil with plenty of fertilizer, but a fertilizer not strong enough to eat the roots.

The land that was plowed in the fall for next year's garden will work up better than that that must be plowed in the spring.

The average depreciation of farm machinery is figured at 10 per cent per year. A good machine shed will cut this down materially.

Rhubarb is so easily grown that many fail because of the simplicity. Like asparagus, rhubarb has few but very important requirements.

Hang the ladder under the eaves of the hen house; do not have it lying on the ground in the orchard to fall and break with some one next fall.

The seven states, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri, grow annually about 54,500,000 acres of corn. The average yield for this area for the past five years has been about 32 bushels per acre.

Why Nelson Proposed

Most of Nelson's friends had been busy conjecturing which would it be Orilla or Justine.

"No man can like two girls exactly the same," said Marian as the girls were discussing the subject.

"The many admire one for her looks; another for her cleverness and may fascinate and rejoice him with flattery while another he may care for her candor."

"Nelson is going to take Justine to the dance tonight," announced Helen. "But probably Orilla had a previous engagement. She never wants for admirers."

Justine was radiant in her new gown when Nelson called for her. The happy thought that he had showed her the preference gave her a softened look of beauty. The ride to the ballroom was a short one. As Nelson helped her out of the carriage she put her hand up to her ear and exclaimed in dismay: "I've lost my earrings!"

"Are you quite certain you wore it?"

"Positive," Justine answered, nodding her head emphatically. "It's not likely I'd wear only one."

"Don't worry about it. We're late already for the dance, and its too chilly for you to stay out here while I search for it. Let's go in the house and I'll return and see if you dropped it in the carriage."

Nelson spent the greater part of the evening hunting for the trinket, but it was not to be found. All his efforts were in vain. When he rejoined the merry party Justine was the greatest of all. He commenced to sympathize with her and tried to console her for the loss, but to his great amazement she answered in a joking tone free from all anxiety, "I'll advertise in the morning and offer a liberal reward."

"Anyway Justine if it wasn't for the earrings I might never have realized what pretty ears you have, and have something important for them to hear on our way home."

As Justine's partner came to claim her dance Nelson soliloquized, "I believe I feel worse about the loss than she does. It was hard to decide whom I cared for the most. Heaven be praised! I know now. Any girl who can lose a gorgeous jewel like that and say she can be just as happy without it, and that jewels have no great charm for me, and it doesn't pay to worry one's head about it, has a heart as big as here are so many more important things to think about. By George! How stupid of me not to know sooner it was Justine I loved. Orilla is forever fretting about infinitesimal microscopic nothings."

On their way home Nelson said to his friendship for you has developed into an overpowering love. What would you do if I gave you a kiss?" he asked the girl.

"I'd give it back to you," she answered promptly.

Nelson and Justine were married a few months later. Before long Nelson could not refrain from noticing how easily provoked and exasperated his young wife could be over the smallest occurrences. The few times Nelson saw Orilla he marvelled how cheerful she looked while his own wife was continually complaining and nothing was good enough, or too good for her and she made such demands upon his time and pocketbook. It seemed inconceivable that she was the same person. When Edith's engagement was announced to the champion football player of the season, Nelson felt a pang of regret when he thought how his judgment and calculations had played him false.

"Orilla will make an ideal wife for a professor," he vouchsafed to his wife.

"It's easier to be a professor's wife," she snapped, "than to have to cater to a man who usually is late for dinner."

Nelson took the rebuke in silence and wondering what had happened today that had added two lines to his wife's face.

"You're as changeable as the moon," complained he. "How easily you are annoyed. You worry that your maid isn't capable, and you worry when she threatens to leave. If you buy a blue dress, you're sure it will look green in the gaslight and—"

"I have finished!" interposed his wife. "With such a nagging, unappreciating husband, it's surprising I haven't nervous prostration," she said, wiping the tears from her eyes. "Naturally it doesn't concern you, if I lost the gold hatpin mother brought from Europe. I'm dead tired hunting in every nook and corner for it. Do I receive gold hat pins every day?"

Justine indignantly, "that I can afford to lose one without mentioning it!"

"But, my dear," said her husband in a conciliatory tone, "you weren't so harassed and vexed when you lost that valuable earring before we were engaged."

"Oh, I've always wanted to tell you," replied his wife, "that those earrings were only imitations."

"Justine, why didn't you tell me sooner. You led me to believe they were real."

"Did I?" Justine answered, "I never told you because you never asked me."

His Time-Saving Plan

"I rarely read a letter through," Grampell has said many times. "If it is from a girl, I can always gather from the first three lines what she is going to tell me, and I let the rest of the letter do the rest. This plan works particularly well if the letter is in reply to an invitation. If I see that the note is short I know she accepts. If it is long, I know she can't go, and I am wasting four pages explaining why. Usually I don't care why—and think of all the time I save by not reading explanations!"

Grampell found his plan excellent when it came to dealing with Jeanette Tripp. She was an especially nice girl, but she possessed a superabundance of language. Jeanette always took 500 words to tell one 50 words of news and when she had paper and pen before her she ranted in her verbal wealth. It was after she wrote Grampell six large pages conveying the regretful news that she was unable to go to the theater that he inaugurated his plan. Grampell never did more than tear open the envelope of Jeanette's notes. If the writing was of formidable length he merely threw it into the waste paper basket and asked himself: "Who'll I ask now to go with me?"

Grampell invited Jeanette to join an opera party recently and when her answer came he knew it was short before he opened it.

"Good!" he murmured, pulling out the sheet. He lingered over throwing it away, because for some reason of late Jeanette had grown to interest him a good deal. But Grampell hated to break a habit. There were about six lines on the front page and he tossed the missive away cheerfully.

It was eight o'clock when Grampell in full regalia drew up at Jeanette's house and mounted the steps. The maid delivered her message as soon as she opened the door. "Miss Tripp," she recited, "said when you came you were to go to Mrs. Smith's if you please."

"Oh," said Grampell blankly. Then he decided that she must be dining there. The only Smiths who gave dinners were the Algernon Smiths, and they lived 30 blocks away.

Three policemen strolled their voices shouting after Grampell's taxi as he shot through the streets. He was host at the opera party and would be late as it was. Dashing up the steps of the Algernon Smiths, on whom he had not a calling acquaintance, Grampell was ushered in. From the dining room came the click and hum of a large dinner party. Presently Smith appeared. He was polite, but decidedly curious. Most evidently he could not recall having invited Grampell to dine. Also Miss Tripp was not there.

It was very awkward. Grampell had the consciousness that Smith would tell the servants immediately on his departure to watch the upstairs windows and the silver safe. Once outside Grampell wiped his wet brow and gazed wildly about in the cold night. Where in creation was Jeanette? Finding a drug store he called up her house. Nobody was at home. The maid he had talked with was out. The other maid didn't know anything about it.

Grampell arrived at the theater place and melted as to collar and he slunk down to his block of six seats like a criminal. The four persons seated there greeted him with becoming hauteur and said: "Sh!" when he agonizedly started to apologize.

Something was happening on the stage, but Grampell never knew what it was. He was picturing the wrath of Jeanette waiting, hopefully waiting for him at the door. The four persons sitting there waited and grew to hate him. Then the curtain fell and the lights went up.

Directly across the aisle from him, two rows down, sat Jeanette! Turning her head she saw him and smiled sweetly. It was not at all a look of indignation. Jeanette's mind seemed quite at peace. Grampell reached her side in three strides.

"Where were you?" he inquired. "Why didn't you wait for me? And what Smiths were you at?"

"What are you talking about?" demanded the young woman. "Didn't you get my letter? I wrote you that I had already promised to go to the opera tonight. The Smiths? That was a message I left for the superintendent of my mission—he was to go to the Smiths for some books we had collected for the children. Isn't the music lovely tonight?"

Ancient Fountain Pen.
An illustration of an "everlasting" pen found with description in a manuscript dated 1725, and signed by Sieur. Blon, "purveyor to the king and maker of mathematical instruments," Paris, appears in "Popular Mechanics." Like the modern fountain pen, it was made with three principal pieces. The central section contained the ink, which flowed to the pen through a perforation. The lower cap had a threaded rod in its center, which closed the perforation in the ink container when screwed into place. The upper end of the ink container, which was closed by a threaded cap provided with a lead pencil point covered by still another cap.

GUINEA MEAT IS DELICIOUS

When Matured Bird Cannot Be Killed by Any Chicken for a Pot-Roast or Pie.

You have heard of guinea fowl, but did you ever taste one? If you like the delicious flavor of wild game, especially the prairie chicken, you are sure to enjoy a meal of guinea fowl. When young, the guinea is more tender and more juicy than the prairie chicken, and is far superior to any other bird as a broiler or a fry. When matured they cannot be excelled by any chicken for a pot roast or pie. Their flesh is rather dark, but fine grained and very tender, with an exquisite gamey flavor. The eggs, while rather small, have a rich taste that most persons like. There is an ever increasing demand for guinea in the larger cities for restaurant trade. There's profit in raising them.

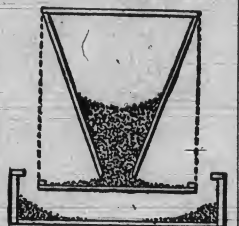

Guinea are not so serviceable as hens when raised in close confinement, but if allowed the run of the farm they will practically raise themselves, with hardly any expense to their owners, and will return a profit in both eggs and meat. The guinea is naturally a wild bird, and will usually range to the widest part of the country, so that it is usually difficult to find its nest. If guinea and turkey eggs are set at about the same time, and the young divided into flocks, half guinea and half turkey, when given to the brood hen, the guinea will remain with the other birds and will not be nearly so wild as when kept alone.

The feed for young guinea may be the same as for young turkeys. After three weeks they may be put on free range, feeding three times a day, with plenty of fresh water. They do not scratch like other fowls, and therefore are safe to have in the garden.

A handsome hopper for preventing hens from wasting their food may be made of galvanized iron or wood, as shown in the illustration. The hop-

Sprinkle, Incubator Eggs.
One of the experiment stations has found that by sprinkling eggs during the last three days of artificial incubation, one-third more eggs were hatched, and the eggs that were sprinkled from the third day on gave about 10 per cent better hatch. Submerging the eggs did not seem to increase the hatch as much as sprinkling. It was also found that while it is easy to develop chicks in 21-day thick-shelled, dark, Brahma eggs, it is very difficult to get a good hatch.

No Sentiment in Men.
There is no sentiment in a hen. Her only object in life is to get enough to eat. If she is given that and a warm, well-ventilated house to sleep in at night, a dry, sheltered place in winter, she will do the rest.

POULTRY NOTES

Watch the hens for superfluous fat. The poultry business is not all profits.

Be generous with fresh air and water and sunshine.

Leca is particularly well liked by chicks because of its tenderness. It is easier to keep the hens' quarters clean than it is to fight disease.

If cabbage is fed in too large quantities, the eggs may partake of its flavor.

Don't put off buying your breeding stock for the poultry yard till next spring.

Green food is one of the essentials for healthy fowls and for satisfactory egg production.

Have the hen yard border on the garden, so that the vegetables can be easily transferred.

The fact of the business is, the average farm flock produces about 120 eggs per hen each year.

The problem of getting green food for poultry in the winter is much more pressing than in summer.

Once a month paint the roosts with coal-oil, using a broad paint brush, and pour a little into any cracks about the ends of perches.

Provide plenty of dry earth and coal ashes where the hens may dust themselves, and there is little danger of body lice in a clean house.

The best way to keep the scratching shod is the one that drops the eggs in your market basket during the winter months when eggs are highest.

Place a shallow pan with a little kerosene in it where the hens have to walk through it in entering their night quarters, and mites are not apt to give trouble.

Synopsis of County Unit Bill.

Following is a synopsis of the county unit bill that passed the Senate last week and is identical with the one that the House had passed:

The county unit bill, passed by the Senate today, provides that at intervals of three years 35 per cent of the qualified voters of the county—the county may petition the County Judge for an election, at which the sense of the voters may be taken as to whether or not there will be sold in that intoxicating liquor. It requires a majority of the legal voters in the county at this election to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors or to permit its sale.

"Under the provisions of this bill, as the Appellate Court has construed Section 51 of the constitution, if the county, the largest unit, votes wet, and the precinct, the smallest unit within the county, dry, there may be sold intoxicating liquors only in the precincts which vote wet, and the constitution provides for the county, city, township and precinct as a unit. On the other hand, if a county votes dry and some precincts vote wet, they are not allowed to remain so."

"The bill passed today is not an original measure. It is an amendment to Section 550 of the Kentucky Statutes, entitled, 'Liquors—Intoxicating.' It provides that the words 'cities of the first, second, third and fourth classes' be stricken from the statute."

State Wide Primary Election.

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 26.—The State wide primary bill, the most drastic ever drawn, which was written and presented in the House by Representative C. B. Thompson of Covington, was favorably reported in the House today.

It is predicted that every machine politician, big and little, in the Democratic and Republican Parties, which fight this splendid measure, which is enacted into law, would put all political machines out of the business.

Representative Thompson, expects to make the fight of his life to secure its passage, and it is understood Representative Harry Meyers will also work for it.

Indian Killed on Track.

Near Rochelle, Ill., an Indian went to sleep on a railroad track and was killed by the fast express. He paid for his carelessness with his life. Often it is that way when people neglect coughs and colds. Don't risk your life when prompt use of Dr. King's New Discovery will cure them and so prevent a dangerous throat and lung trouble. "It completely cured me in a short time of a terrible cough that followed a severe attack of Grip," writes J. R. Watts, Floydada, Texas, "and I regained 15 pounds in weight that I had lost." Quick, safe, reliable and guaranteed. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free—all dealers.

Well Licked.
A boy of twelve years of age with an air of melancholy resignation, went to his teacher and handed in the following note from his mother before taking his seat: "Dear Sir: Please excuse James for not being present yesterday. He played truant, but you needn't whip him for it, as the boy he played truant with and him fell out, and he licked James; and a man he threw stones at caught him and licked him; and the driver of a car they hung on to licked him; and the owner of a cat they chased licked him. Then I licked him when he came home, after which his father licked him, and I had to give him another for being impudent to me for telling his father. So you needn't lick him until next time. He thinks he will attend regular in the future."

Land Hunters Plentiful.

There has not been known such activity in land as is now on in this county. The purchasers are here in abundance, and some of them have put in much time without being able yet to secure what they want. The value of Pendleton land is beginning to be appreciated at somewhat of its worth and people who own it are averse to turning it loose, as prices here are much lower than in the adjoining counties. Some recent transfers of land near town show an increase of about 400 per cent. In the last fifteen years, and the general rule is to secure double and treble the prices now that ruled that far back—Pendleton land.

CHAPTER I.

The roaring reports of the motor fell into abrupt silence, as the driver brought his car to a halt.

"You signaled!" he called across the grind of set brakes.

In the blending glare of the search-lights from the two machines, the gray one arriving and the limousine drawn to the roadside, the young girl stood, her hand still extended in the gesture which had stopped the man who now leaned across his wheel.

"Oh, please," she appealed again.

On either side stretched away the Long Island meadows, dark, soundless, apparently uninhabited. Only this spot of light broke the monotony of dreariness. A keen, chill, October wind sighed past, stirring the girl's delicate gown as its folds lay unheeded in the dust, fluttering her fur-lined cloak and shaking two or three childish curls from the bondage of her velvet hood. The driver swung himself down and came toward her with the unobtrusive swiftness of one trained to the unexpected.

"I beg pardon—can I be of some use?" he asked.

"We are lost," she confessed hurriedly. "If you could set us right, I should be grateful. I—we must get home soon. I have been a guest at a house somewhere here, and started to return to New York this afternoon. The chauffeur does not know Long Island; we cannot seem to find any place. And now we have lost a tire. I was afraid—"

She broke off abruptly, as her companion descended from the limousine.

"We only want to know the way," she said. "We are all right, but we are lost. This is my cousin; I came out after her, you see. Don't get so worried, Emily—we'll go straight on as soon as Anderson changes the tire."

He nudged his words slightly and spoke so calmly, and with such good-humored ease he turned to the white light was too flushed; otherwise there was nothing unusual in his appearance. And his caste was evident and unquestionable in spite of any circumstance. There was no anger in his dark eyes as he gazed straight before her, only pity and helplessness.

"I can tell your chauffeur the road," the driver of the gray car quietly said. "Have you far to go?"

"To the St. Royal," she answered, looking at him. "My uncle is there. Is that far?"

"No; you can reach there by ten o'clock. I will speak to your chauffeur."

"Do, like a good fellow," the other man interposed. "Awfully obliged. You're not angry, Emily?" he added, lowering his voice and moving nearer her. "Since we're engaged, why should you get frightened simply because I proposed we get married to-night instead of waiting for a big wedding? I thought it was a good idea, you know. It isn't my fault Anderson got lost, and I'm getting us home for dinner, is it?"

"Hush, Dick," she rebuked, hot color sweeping her face. "You, you are not well. And we are not engaged; you forget. Just because people want us to be—? Too proud to let her steadiness quiver, she broke the sentence."

If the driver had heard, and it was scarcely possible that he had not, he made no sign. By the acetylene light he produced an envelope and pencil, and proceeded to sketch a map showing the route to the limousine's chauffeur.

"Understand it?" he queried, concluding. He had a certain decision of manner, not in the least arrogant, but the result of a serene self-reliance that somehow accorded with his little, trained grace of movement. A judge of men would have found him an athlete, perhaps in an unusual line.

"Yes, sir," the chauffeur replied. "I'll get Miss Ffrench home in no time after I get the tire on."

The indiscretion of the spoken name was ignored, except for a slight lift of the chauffeur's eyebrows.

"How long does it take you to change a tire?"

"About half an hour; it's night, of course."

An odd, choking gurgle bounded from the gray machine, where a dark figure had sat until now in quiescent muteness.

"Half an hour!" echoed the gray machine's driver, and faced toward the chuckle. "Rupert, it isn't in your contract, but do you want to come over and change this tire?"

"If I do it for you, Darling," was the sweet response; the small figure rolled over the edge of the car with a cat-like celerity. "Where are your tools, you chauffeur? Quick!"

The bewildered chauffeur mechanically reached for a box on the running-board, as the young assistant came up, grinning all over his malign face.

"Oh, quicker! What's the matter, rheumatism? They wouldn't have you in a training camp for motor trucks on Sunday, Huckle, please."

There never had been anything done to that sedate limousine quite as this was done. Even the preoccupied girl looked on in fascination at a rapidity of unwanted movement suggesting a conjuring feat.

"By George!" exclaimed her escort. "A splendid man you've got there! Really a splendid chauffeur, you know."

The driver smiled with a gleam of irony, but disregarded the comment. "Would you like to get into your car?" he asked the girl. "You will be able to start very soon."

"I see that," she acknowledged gratefully. "Thank you; I would rather wait here."

"Is your chauffeur trustworthy?" "Oh, yes; he has been in my uncle's employ for three years. But he was never before out here, in this place."

There was a pause, filled by the soft monotone of insults drifting from the side of the limousine, for Rupert talked while he worked and his fellow-worker did not please him.

"Vrench, baby hippo! Oh, look behind you where you put it—you need a memory course. You ought to be passing spoons to a lady with a sewing machine. Did you ever see a motor car before? There, pump her up, do."

He rose, drew out his watch and glanced at it. "Five minutes; I'll have to beat that day after tomorrow."

The driver looked over at him and their eyes laughed together. Now, for the first time the girl noticed that across the shoulders of both men's jerseys ran in silver letters the name of a famous foreign automobile.

"I am very grateful, indeed," she said bravely and graciously. "I wish I could say more, or say it better. The journey will be short, now."

But all her dignity could not check the frightened shrinking of her glance, first toward the interior of the limousine and then toward the man who was to enter there with her. And the driver of the gray machine saw it.

"I have done very little," he returned. "May I put you in your car?"

The chauffeur was gathering his tools, speechlessly outraged, and making ready to start. Seated among the rugs and cushions, under the light of the luxurious car, the girl deliberately drew off her glove and held out her right hand toward the driver of the gray machine.

"Thank you," she said again, meeting his eyes with her own, whose darkness contrasted oddly with the blonde curls clustered under her hood.

"You are not afraid to drive into the cold alone?" he asked.

"Alone? Why, my cousin—"

"Your cousin is going to stay with me."

She flung back her head; amazement, question, relief struggled over her sensitive face, and finally melted into irrespressible mirth under the fine amusement of his regard.

"You are clever—and kind, to do that! No, I am not afraid."

He closed the door.

"Take your mistress home," he bade the chauffeur. "Crank for him, Rupert."

"Why, why?" stammered the limousine's passenger, turning as the motor started.

No one heeded him.

"By-by, don't break any records," Rupert called after the chauffeur.

"Hold yourself in, do. If you shed any more tires, telegraph for me, and if I'm over here and save you time."

Silence closed in again, as the red tail light vanished around a bend. The gray car's driver nodded curtly to the stupefied youth in the middle of the road.

"Unless you want to stay here all night, you'd better get in the machine," he suggested. "My name is Ffrench—I suppose yours is Ffrench?"

"Dick Ffrench. But, see here, you mean well, I'm going with my cousin. I'd like to drive with you, but I'm busy."

"You're not fit to go with your cousin."

"Not—"

"Fit" completed Lestrangle definitely. "Can you hang on somewhere, Rupert?"

"I can," Rupert assured, with an infection of his own. "Get your friend aboard."

Lestrangle was already in his seat, waiting.

"What's that for?" asked the dazed guest, as, on taking his place, a strap was slipped around his waist, securing him to the seat.

"So you won't fall out," soothed the grinning Rupert. "You ain't well, you know. Not that I'd care if you did, but somebody might blame Darling."

The car leaped forward, gathering speed to an extent that was a revelation in motoring to Ffrench. The keen air, the giddy rush through the dark, were a sobering tonic. After a while he spoke to the man beside him, nervously embarrassed by a situation he was beginning to appreciate.

"This is a racing car?"

"It was."

"It takes its chances. If you are connected with the Ffrenchs who manufacture the Mercury car, you should know something of automobile racing yourself. I noticed your limousine was of that make."

"Yes, that is my uncle's company. I did see a race once at Coney Island. A car turned over and killed its driver and made a nasty mess. I—I didn't fancy it."

A wheel slipped off a stone, giving the car a swerving lurch which was as instantly corrected—with a second lurch—by its pilot. The effect was not tranquillizing; the shock swept the last confusion from Ffrench's brain.

"Where are you taking me?" he presently asked.

"Where do you want to go? I will set you down at the next village we come to; you can stay there to-night, or you can get a trolley to the city."

The question remained unanswered. Several times Ffrench glanced, rather diffidently, at his companion's clear, firm profile, and looked away again without speaking.

"I want to get my cousin to-day, and my host gave me a couple of highballs," he volunteered, at last. "I don't know what you thought—"

Lestrangle twisted his car around a belated farm wagon.

"How old are you?" he inquired calmly.

"Twenty-three."

"I'm nearly twenty-seven. That's what I thought."

The simpler mind considered this for a space.

"Some men are born awake, some awake themselves, and some are shaken into a waking," paraphrased Lestrangle, in addition. "If I were you, I'd wake up; it comes easier and it's sure to arrive anyhow. There is the village ahead—shall I stop?"

"It looks terribly dull," was the doleful verdict.

"The count with me," flashed the other unexpectedly; for a fraction of an instant his eyes left the road and turned to his companion's face. "Did you ever see race practice at dawn? Come try a night in a training camp."

"You'd bother with me?"

A head bobbed up by Ffrench's knee, where Rupert was clinging in some inexplicable fashion.

"Once I rode eight miles out there by the hood, head downward, holding in a pin," he imparted, by way of entertainment.

Ffrench, stared at the reeling perch indicated and gasped.

"What for?" he asked.

"So we could keep on to our control instead of being put out of the running, of course. Did you guess I was curing a headache?"

"But you might have been killed!" exclaimed Ffrench, in the light of the lamps there was visible the mechanic's droil twist of lip and brow.

"I'd drive to hell with Lestrangle," he explained sweetly, and settled back in his place.

Ffrench drew a long breath. After a moment he again looked at the driver.

"I'll come," he accepted. "And, thank you."

It was Lestrangle who smiled this time, with a sudden and enchanting warmth of mirth.

"We'll try to amuse you," he promised.

CHAPTER II.

It was a business consultation that was being held in Mr. Ffrench's firelit library, in spite of the presence of a tea table and the young girl behind it. A consultation between the two partners who composed the Mercury Automobile company, of whom the lesser was speaking with a certain anecdotal weight.

"The Journey Will Be Short Now."

"And he said he was losing too much time on the turns; so the next round he took the bend at 72 miles an hour. He went over, of course. The third car we've lost this year; I'm glad the season's closed."

Emily Ffrench gave an exclamation, her velvet eyes widening behind their black lashes.

"But the driver? Was the poor driver hurt, Mr. Bailey?"

"He wasn't killed, Miss Emily," answered Bailey, with a tinge of pensive regret. He was a large, ruddy, white-haired man, with the slow and careful habit of speech sometimes found in those who live much with massive machinery. "No, he wasn't killed; he's in the hospital. But he wrecked a good car as ever was built, through sheer foolishness. It costs money."

Mr. Ffrench responded to the indirect appeal with more than usual irritation, his level gray eyebrows contracting.

"We ought to have better drivers. Why do you not get better men, Bailey? You wanted to go into this racing business; you said the cars needed advertising. My brother always attended to that side of the factory affairs while he lived, with you as his manager. Now it is altogether in your hands. Why do you not find a proper driver?"

"Perhaps my hands are not used to holding so much," mused Bailey unresentfully. "A man might be a good manager, maybe, and weak as a partner. It isn't the same, though. But a first-class driver isn't easy to get, Mr. Ffrench. There's Delmar killed, and George tied up with another company, and Dorian retired, all this last season; and we don't want a foreigner. There's only one man I like—"

"Well, get him. Pay him enough."

Bailey hunched himself together and crossed his legs.

"Yes, sir. He's beaten our cars—and others—every race lately, with poorer machines, just by sheer pretty driving. He drives fast, yet he doesn't knock out his car. But there's a lot after him—there's just one way we could get him, and get him for keeps."

"And that?"

"He's ambitious. He wants to get into something more solid than racing. If we offered to make him manager, and let him put some new ideas into the factory, he'd race our cars, wherever we chose to enter them. I know him pretty well."

The proposition was advanced tentatively, with the hesitation of one venturing in unknown places. But Ethan Ffrench said nothing, his gray eyes fixed on the hearth.

"He Understands Motor Construction and Designing."

"He understands motor construction and designing, and he's been with the big foreign firms," Bailey resumed, after waiting. "He'd be useful around; I can't be everywhere. What he'd do for us in racing would help a whole lot. It's very well to make a fine standard car, but it needs advertising to keep people remembering. And my machine is the same as Lestrangle won the cup race with. They like it."

SICKLY CHILD

Made Well By Vinol—Letters from a Grateful Mother

New Haven, Conn.—"My little girl, ever since her birth, was frail and sickly and nothing seemed to do her any good until we tried your cod liver oil and iron tonic, Vinol. As soon as she commenced to take it, I noticed an improvement in her health and appearance. She has now taken three bottles of Vinol, and from the good it has done her I can say it will do all you claim for it in building up and strengthening frail and delicate children. (Name furnished on request.)"

Another mother of Chicago, Ill., writes: "I can not say too much in praise of Vinol for delicate, ailing children."

We ask every mother of a frail, sickly or ailing child in this vicinity to try Vinol on our agreement to return their money if it does not do all we claim.

"I don't know," said Mr. Ffrench slowly, "that it is dignified for the manager of the Mercury factory to be a racing driver."

"The Christine cars are driven by the son of the man who makes them," was the response. "Some drive their own."

"The son of the man who makes them," repeated the other. He turned his face still more to the quivering fire, his always severe expression hardening strangely and bitterly. "The son—"

The girl rose to draw the crimson curtains before the windows and to push an electric switch, filling the room with a subdued glow in place of the late afternoon grayness. Her delicate face, as she regarded her uncle, revealed most strongly its characteristic over-earnestness and a sensitive reflection of the moods of those around her. Emily Ffrench's childhood had been passed in a Canadian convent, and something of its mysticism clung about her. As the cheer-ful change she had wrought flashed over the room, Mr. Ffrench held out his hand in a gesture of summons, so that she came across to sit on the broad arm of his chair during the rest of the conference, her soft gaze resting on the third member.

"My adopted son and nephew having no such talents, we must do the best we can," Mr. Ffrench stated, with his most precise coldness. "Being well born and well bred, he has no taste for a mechanic's labor or for circus performances with automobiles in public. Who is your man, Bailey?"

"Lestrangle, sir. You must have heard of him often."

"I never read racing news."

"I read ours," said Bailey dully. "We've been licked often enough by him. And he's straight—he's one of the few men who'll stop at the grandstand and lose time reporting a smash-up and sending help around. Every man on the track likes Darling Lestrangle."

"Talk whom?"

"Bailey flushed brick-red.

"I didn't mean to call him that. He signs himself D. Lestrangle, and some of them started reading it Darling, joking because he was such a anyhow. It's just a nickname."

Emily laughed out involuntarily, surprised.

"I beg pardon," she at once apologized, "but it sounded so frivolous."

"If you try this man, you had better keep that nickname out of the factory," Mr. Ffrench advised stiffly. "What respect could the workmen feel for a manager with such a title? If possible, you would do well to prevent them from recognizing him as the racing driver."

Bailey, who had risen at the chime of a clock, halted amazed.

"Respect for him?" he echoed. "Not recognize him? Why, there isn't a Continued

LARK OF BRITISH DUCHESS

Her Grace of Sutherland Dined at London Masked Ball in Male Attire.

A carefully concealed sensation of the brilliant "Arabian Nights Ball," given at Covent Garden, came to light in London when it was learned that among the glittering throng of oriental dancers was her grace the duchess of Sutherland in male attire—that of a maharajah. The incident was deemed so serious that a family conference was called at Stafford house, the magnificent Sutherland residence, in St. James street.

But it was not the duke who caused the trouble, but the earl of Roslyn, the comest brother, who ordered his sister to "give an account of herself." The duchess took umbrage at this style of censor and citing his somewhat lurid career bade him defiance.

"I would like to know," she is reported to have said, "who appointed you as censor of this family's morals; so don't talk rot."

A cross-examination elicited from the duchess the fact that while she did wear a man's clothes at the ball and face to a swarthy hue to resemble the eastern potentate, trousers were worn by her and a cloak enveloped her figure.

So at the conclusion of the inquisition the duchess figured that the earl of Roslyn owed her an apology.

"You see it was all perfectly innocent," she said, "and done just for a lark. You really should get down on your knees to me for stirring up such a fuss."

YEARLY PAPER OF ALASKA

Publication of the Eskimo Bulletin is Evidence of Progress of Twenty Years.

In the bad old days the masters of the whaling vessels sailing from San Francisco to the far north used to give the Alaskan Eskimos raw "fire water" in order to secure the valuable furs they had obtained during the long arctic winter. Little they dreamed that these fierce children of the north would one day be so advanced as to print their own newspaper, a writer in the World Weekly exclaims. After the terrible slaughter by the whalers of the alcohol-frenzied natives of Cape Prince of Wales, in Bering strait, it was a rather ticklish job for a white man to start a Bible class. Still, H. A. Thornton attempted it, but he was shot dead by a boy of fourteen, who was killed in his turn by his own kinsman. This affair happened in 1890. Two years after W. T. Lopp appeared on the scene as a white man. They settled at Cape Prince of Wales, and year after year, until 1903, they taught humanity to the Eskimos. The reindeer was introduced from Siberia, and Mr. Lopp got his pupils to learn to rear the herds. He also taught them boat building, carpentering, etc., and, to put a final touch to his valuable work, he had a small press brought from the states, and it was not long after that his pupils were able to compose and print their own paper. This is probably the only yearly newspaper in the world—the Eskimo Bulletin.

There were only two bids, and the book was finally bought in at $3,000. The vendors were the trustees of the Bedford Literary Institute. The book was to have been sold in London last May, the institute being in financial difficulties. It was expected to realize from $40,000 to $50,000. At the last moment, however, the attorney general intervened in order to ascertain whether the trustees were empowered with the right to sell the book, and it was withdrawn from the sale. After investigation the attorney general came to the conclusion that the sale could not be withdrawn, and consequently the book came under the hammer. A first edition of Walton's "Complete Angler," published in 1653, at 35 cents, fetched $3,750.

GOOD ROADS & FARM NOTES

The disk will never take the place of the plow. Many pastures fail because they are not made right. Good seed is an integral part of success in potato growing. Legumes should be included in every well-planned rotation. Straw is much too valuable to be allowed to rot in the stack. There is a poor farmer around here who sees poor live stock on the farm. Thoroughly air dried seed corn will stand almost any temperature, no matter how low.

Heavy clay soils that puddle and bake after a rain are benefited by the addition of lime. One way to ease the work on the farm and make it more attractive is to systematize it. Clean up the yard and farmstead generally. Place set out a few more ornaments next spring. Those farmers who have roots to feed their stock this winter (whether they have a silo or not) are lucky. Going to join the Good Roads club? No such club in the neighborhood, eh? Then get to work and organize one.

Rotation is as necessary to the growing of profitable crops as variety of food is essential to the health of the individual. Manure is the prime necessity of the gardener, and as the hauling and composting can be done at the least cost during cold weather, the manure should be hauled then. The manure for the vegetables must be hauled and piled during the winter so as to be well rotted when it is time to use it in the spring. Alfalfa should not be pastured or cut so close to the ground as to injure the crowns. On good, rich land two and often three crops can be cut each season.

Rate Schedule Lacking. It was the day before Christmas in one of the big railroad offices, says the San Francisco Call. They were talking about the good old days when they were all children and there was no interstate commerce commission. "Well," observed the optimist, "I guess old Santa will come around as usual." "Nope," replied the grouchy. "Don't look for him this year."

"Why not?" asked the optimist. "Well," came the answer, "under the new law he's a common carrier, and the old man hasn't filed his rate schedule."

TO PREVENT SOIL WASHING

Brush in the Gullies With the Tops Turned Upstream Will Save Fields From Spring Floods.

Soil erosion can be controlled if you understand the principles of soil formation and will take a little time to attend to the rapidly forming ditches.

Place brush in the gully with the tops turned up and it will catch and hold the material washed down. Be certain that you place enough brush in the ditch so that the spring rains will not wash it away. It would be well, also, to throw some hay on the brush, to aid in catching the finer material. And, if you prefer, the woven-wire dam also may be used. Place a stake on each side of the gully in the ground three feet from the bank and fasten a piece of woven wire to them. Be sure that they are firmly in the ground. Put straw, old hay or fine brush above this dam and it will catch most of the material washed down by the water. As the gully fills up add another strand of woven wire and repeat the process.

Humus, the decaying vegetable matter of the soil, tends to prevent soil erosion. Humus absorbs and retains moisture. When the ground contains an abundance of moisture the rains are absorbed and carried into the subsoil. Therefore the rain is not left on the surface to wash ditches. Keep the soil full of humus if you desire to stop the soil washing. Have the grasses and legumes occupy a prominent place in the rotation for their knees fields.

Soil erosion can never be prevented entirely, but it can be greatly reduced if you manage the fields as you should.

HANDY TOOL IS NEGLECTED

Old-Fashioned Shaving Horse Rarely Seen on Farms at Present Time—Is Easily Made.

The old-fashioned shaving horse is one of the handiest tools used on the farm, but is rarely seen at the present time.

Shaving Horse.

It is easily constructed and nothing else really takes its place in the work it is intended to do. Lettuce Is Quite Hardy. A hardy plant that meets the smiles and frowns of the weather with a good grace is lettuce. The seed may be sown very early, if the ground is not frozen, and treated like beets or onions. It is one of the cool plants, so called. With the first warm weather it will be ready to grow, and will soon be large enough for use. None of the salad plants is more welcome. Besides its uses as a salad plant it makes a good pot herb, though its value for this purpose is not well known.

GARDENING WITH A WHEEL HOC

The real pleasures of gardening remain unknown to the person who has never used a wheel hoe. This modern invention stimulates good gardening. By its use a person can cultivate his whole garden before breakfast, and feel proud of the accomplishment. The wheel hoe will use it often, and thus keep the soil of his garden in ideal condition.

NATURALIST ON THE SLUMS

Dr. Hornaday Gives Some Sound Advice to Young Women Tourists From the West.

A short time ago a party of young women tourists from the west visited the New York zoological park and called on Dr. Hornaday, to whom they had a letter of introduction. The director personally conducted their inspection of the park, answered their rattling fire of questions and placed at their disposal so far as possible his vast fund of information on topics in his line. As they were about to leave he surprised them by giving them some advice in a different direction and of a nature that visitors to New York do not usually receive.

"Now, girls," he said, "of course you wish to see everything in New York, but do not visit the slums. It will not add one thing to your education. I have lived in New York eleven years, and if there are any slums here I do not know where to find them. I could do some good there. The casual visitor cannot. Only a morbid and unwholesome curiosity would prompt anyone to seek such places for the purpose of looking at degradation, and you can use your time to better advantage. There are many important and attractive things to be seen in New York that you cannot afford to waste your time on unworthy sights. Try to see the pleasant and valuable things and leave New York clean its own slums—hoping that may be soon."

It has been reported since that several mothers and fathers are grateful to the director for his unexpected advice.

GLASS PAVING A FAILURE

Experiments in France Show the Material Will Not Stand the Traffic in Streets.

Seven or eight years ago a plant was established at La Demi Lune, France, for making glass paving material under the name of "pierre de verre Garchey." After many experiments carried out at the factory the manufacturer applied to the Lyon municipality for the right to make a trial on one of the chief thoroughfares. The necessary authorization was granted, provided that the inventor would bear the entire expense of the undertaking.

The place chosen for laying the glass pavement was a section of the Place de la Republique, where traffic of cabs, automobiles and wagons of all kinds is very heavy. The glass broke remained in place for less than two years and were then taken out as they were in very poor condition, the edges were all broken, and in many cases the blocks were split through and through. The opinion of officials here at that time was to the effect that this glass pavement could be used under favorable circumstances for sidewalks, but not for the middle of streets.—Consular and Trade Reports.

Bibles in Persia.

The American Bible society has been at work in northern Persia for 70 years. For 17 years prior to 1896 it had its own agent, but since that time has worked through the missionaries of the Presbyterian church in Urumia, Tabriz, Teheran, Hamadan and Rehest. The political disturbances there have of course interfered with the progress of the work, and, still further, the importation of Persian and Turkish Scriptures has at times been prohibited. Yet the circulation of the Scriptures has been continued, and the last annual report shows 773 copies distributed at Teheran and Tabriz. This report contained a letter from the Rev. Mr. Doombourjan, reporting that during the last ten years he has been able to sell 5,400 copies of the Scriptures in 17 different languages, the greater part in Persian, traveling more than 2,500 miles, and meeting in each year a thousand different persons with whom he has had religious conversations.

No Time to Ride.

Twilight had let her curtain fall and plinned it with a star, as the man in the motor car, wrapped and furred against the sharp cold, spun along the country road. At a turn he came upon a tramp sitting on a sheltered log, asleep or frozen. It was up to him not to let the homeless one freeze to death and he went to his rescue. "Here!" he said, shaking him; "here! Wake up! You'll freeze! Come along with me!" The tramp straightened up, rubbed his eyes, looked at the man and the car waiting in the road and shook his head. "Aw," he growled, "go on and leave me alone! This is no kind of a time to be riding around in an open car."—William J. Lampton in Judge.

Overheard.

"Hello!" said Biddad, as Jimpsonberry flashed by in his motor car. "I wish I had a motor car." "Oh, nonsense, Bill," said Slathers. "What's the use? You couldn't afford to keep it." "No," said Biddad, "but I could afford to sell it!"—Harper's Weekly.

Too Frivolous.

"I didn't mind my daughter getting engaged now and then." "Well?" "But she went and got married to some jobless dub the next at a summer resort. I call that carrying frivolity too far."

An Animal Weather Prophet.

According to an old folk-lore story, if a person wishes to know whether there will be a late or early spring the woodchuck is the one to be consulted.

Early in the autumn the woodchuck goes to sleep in his winter quarters. He curls himself up in a little ball, with his nose under his paws so that he can keep his toes warm by breathing on them. Here he sleeps snugly all winter long. But if the story goes, he wakes up suddenly on February 2, stretches himself, rubs his eyes, and at last creeps out of his hole. If the sun is shining brightly and he feels certain that soon the ground will be coming out, for Spring is surely on his way. But if the sun is shining brightly and the first thing he sees as he leaves his burrow is his own shadow, he pops back into his hole as fast as he can, once more tucks his nose under his paws, and settles down for another six weeks' nap. For a cold season is the only result that can be expected from seeing his own little shadow cast by the bright sunlight. It must be confessed that he doesn't always get it just right, but he probably doesn't mind if he does oversleep some fine spring days.

"Do you know that more real danger lurks in a common cold than in any of the minor ailments? The safe way is to take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, a thoroughly reliable preparation and rid yourself of the old cold as quickly as possible. This remedy is for sale by all dealers."

The court of appeals has decided that the public school fund can not be used for hauling children to school. In some counties the local boards of education have been using a portion of that purpose, and the opposition to the procedure had the question tested.

of America and Europe. The restoration of the silk fabrics in large quantities has been a great boon to the silk industry, and the admirers of the Japanese sericulture was yet to see the condition no chemical cotton the cocoon before it was spun into thread. Later the Japanese silk industry was getting out a new substance, which has been called "artificial silk" with some of the same properties as the silk, but the difficulty was that it was not as strong as the silk and took away from the silk industry. Thus Japanese silk has been steadily losing the popularity it once enjoyed and its market has been taken up by the Italian product.

There is now a new method of strengthening the elasticity and strength of the fabric, and at the same time greatly facilitating the spinning into thread. One more benefit from this process will be that manufacturers will be able to obtain a more uniform product than by the old-fashioned way.

Furthermore, the new substance has an antiseptic and antiozonizing effect, and will not injure the hands of operators. Some time ago an American is reported to have discovered a chemical compound which would preserve silk, and this is said to be something similar in composition to the Japanese invention.

OYSTERS RODE IN TAXICABS

They Were From France and New York Frenchmen Craved Them for Dinner.

E. L. Bowles is an express agent of unusual patience. He spent the last day of the year cold, but hopeful, on the French line pier, answering telephone calls from three French restaurants, and merely smiled when, for the thirty-fifth time, a chef asked about "the oyster."

"Please, La Lorraine, where is he with the oyster?" said the impatient chef.

"She is still down the bay," said Bowles. "I think she will be here before long."

"What is it the diners will do if the oysters do not come?"

"When the chefs called up again Mr. Bowles had not time to answer. He was busy with the customs officials arranging for the release of the oysters, which were in sacks."

"Are these things brought here for breeding purposes?" asked the inspector.

"No," said Bowles. "They are French oysters, called 'marennes vertes,' for eating purposes. There are about two hundred Frenchmen in this town who want to eat these oysters tonight with their New Year's dinner. I've got 200 dozen of them and three taxicabs are ready to take them to the restaurants."

At 7:25 p. m., when the taxicabs had gone north with the oysters, Mr. Bowles went into a booth and talked to the three chefs at once. The things that came simultaneously over the wire were too profuse and muddled to permit of translation—New York Tribune.

Novel Way to Rest.

It seems imperative for a certain member of the family to rest an hour after the noon meal each day. The weather had grown mild, and to draw the shades so as to exclude the light kept out the air also, so the steers lost much of its refreshing quality.

A thick pad of absorbent gauze some eight inches long and four inches wide was finished with an elastic band just tight enough to hold the pad securely. This was slipped into place over the eyes.

Days when the eyes burned or ached a compress wet with cool salt and water was placed under the pad, and eyes and nerves were soothed at the same time. By the last named means the eyes were strengthened and the crow's feet indicative of eye strain were ironed out—Harper's Bazar.

Dead Gland.

Is there anything as dead as dead? It must be quite fresh, or it offends the nostril. And no one should talk along without the assurance that it is both infantile and immortal. John Galsworthy is modern. And in "The Man of Property" he produces the slang expression of the eighties. "A dead woman." It is a term of contempt for a woman. But is there any one born in the eighties who could explain that slang term, or remember it? You must get your slang fresh—there is little of it that stands the thinned preservation.

Justifiable Suspicion.

"I guess I must be getting old." "Why do you think so?" "A pretty girl dropped one of her shoes on the sidewalk this morning and I saw another man to beat me."

Of course the ideal barnyard is one made of crushed rock and cement, but this is quite expensive and is hardly necessary. With a clean dry yard surrounding the dairy barn the milk can be kept in perfect condition as it is not a difficult matter to remove every particle of manure or mud from the

ROAD and FARM IMPROVEMENT

AUXILIARY PLANTER IS NEW

Implement May Be Used in Conjunction With Any Other Piece of Farm Machinery.

An auxiliary planter, the invention of A. R. Baldwin of Springfield, Mo., is described by the Scientific American as follows:

The accompanying illustration shows a side view of a planter constructed and arranged in conformity with the present invention, picture in conjunction with an independent hauling truck. The advantage is obvious, as it enables the planter to be used in conjunction with any other suitable farm implement. As an instance, it will be conceived that to attach a planter thus constructed to follow a plow or harrow would serve to shorten the operation of preparing the field by just so much time, cost and labor as would be needed to plant the field after the bed has been prepared, as is the present custom.

Auxiliary Planter.

Of course in this computation it is assumed that there is practically no loss of fertility in the farmyard manure, though it is well known that practically this amount of care is never used by the average or even by the most careful farmer. Even if the nitrogen and humus of the soil were maintained, Professor Hopkins says that unless some supplementary food-stuffs are used, or manure purchased, "it is necessary to purchase and apply some phosphorus in order to replace that sold in the animals and animal products, butter and milk being the only important farm products that do not contain appreciable amounts of phosphorus."

FERTILITY RETURNED TO SOIL

Professor Hopkins Contends Phosphorus Should Be Applied in Live Stock Farming as in Grain.

It is contended by Professor Hopkins that phosphorus should be applied in livestock farming the same as in grain farming, because even under a system of feeding all the crops there is a loss of 20 pounds per acre in four years with livestock farming when grain crops yield 50 bushels per acre and hay one and one-half tons per acre and these are fed and the manure returned to the land.

DEVICE FOR DOUBLE HARNESS

Attachment Shown in Illustration Will Be Found Convenient and Tells Its Own Story.

It is often desirable to hitch up a double team with single harness where a regular double harness is not at hand, or if at hand is perhaps too heavy. The special objection to using a breast plate in a double rig has been the difficulty of attaching it to the Impassable Roads.

Where wheels are left to flourish along the roadsides the snow will be quite liable to drift in and make the roads impassable. This will call for a few good resolutions on the part of those who must travel these roads that next year these roadsides will be cleared, but like other good resolutions they will be forgotten when another year rolls around. "Twas ever thus."

Learning the Anthem

"Say, will you play this solo part over for me?" asked the tenor, as he hastily threw off his hat and overcoat and placed his music in front of the organist. "Just give me my pitch, please."

"I'm sorry, but I can't play it now," replied the organist. "You're nearly half an hour late and we've got to get through all these hymns, besides the anthem. You should have come earlier." He closed the music in front of him.

"Grouch!" muttered the tenor, as he took the music and sat down with the rest of the choir.

"Say," he whispered to the soprano, "if we don't get a new organist pretty soon they'll have to get a new tenor. I'm tired of being sat upon by that fellow."

"Well, but you know, we do have to practice the anthem," said the soprano, "and what's the use of our sitting here, listening to your solo, when we might as well be getting real practice done?"

The tenor moved over nearer the bass and muttered his grievance.

"Yes," agreed the bass, "he sure is in the limit. Why, I called him up the other night and asked him to come out and play over some of my songs—just a little social call, you know. Well, he snapped out that he charged $5 an hour for accompanying people. The bass relaxed into bitter thoughts.

"Well, what did you expect?" asked the soprano. "Did you think he would go out simply to practice with you, for the mere pleasure of it? I'd have charged ten, I assure you."

"Come on, now, if you're going to practice," ordered the organist, belligerently. "Now, follow your music, and all come in on the first beat." He played the opening chords.

"What on earth's the matter?" he exclaimed, disgustedly. "Why don't you come in? There are four beats, and on the fifth every one of you come in. Now, try again, and see if you can count four." Again he played the chords.

"Oh, just a minute," interrupted the soprano. "What is my note? I never can get the right pitch. Hit my note when you play the opening chord louder than the rest, will you?" She beamed upon the organist.

"Now, see here!" exclaimed the organist. "I gave every one of you a copy of this thing to practice at home. You all ought to know it like your own names. I can't play one note louder than another in the first chord! Do you suppose my playing doesn't matter at all, just so you people do just as little work as you can?" and he turned to the organ.

"Oh, well, if you don't want to be obliging!" The soprano's voice was scornful.

The bass and the tenor laughed. "Serves her right," said the tenor, not to voice, "for siding with him in the first place."

"Now, one, two, three, four, sing!" counted the organist at the top of his lungs, as he played the chords once more.

An awful crash of voices rent the air. The organist flung out his hands in dismay. "Now, what is the matter?" he thundered.

"I believe that was my fault," murmured the little contralto. "I was thinking this was another anthem that I know by heart, and I started to sing that! I don't believe I know this one. I wasn't here last Sunday. Yes, you mailed me a copy, but I didn't have time to go over it. Won't you please play my part over a couple of times? Then I'll know it, and we'll get along all right. All the others know their parts." She stepped up to the organ confidently.

"It is now ten minutes of 9," said the organist, looking at his watch. "Just fifty minutes of our hour are up, and at 9:15 I have an engagement. Do you suppose that I can waste the remaining ten minutes on you, when we've got this whole anthem to learn? You sit down and listen and the rest of you get busy now!"

He straightened out the music and lifted his hands to strike the first chord.

"Oh, say, we'll never learn this one," said the bass. "Let's try over one of the old ones, and take this one up for next week. The people won't know the difference, and we'll murder this one if we try to sing it."

"Let's!" eagerly assented the contralto.

"Oh, yes, let's!" said the soprano and the bass, in one voice.

"All right," agreed the organist. "Pick out what you please. I've got to go now. Let me know what you're going to sing." He jumped into his overcoat and departed.

"Bear!" hissed the soprano as the door slammed.

The Thimble.

The thimble is a very small piece of workmanship, but it is a most useful little article. The good old Dutchman who invented it has been dead for many centuries but the usefulness of this small article has never diminished. There is food for a whole sermon in that statement. The thimble was first known as far as we have any record in 1605 and was brought to England by John Lofting. It was originally called a thumb bell, because it was worn on the thumb and shaped like a bell. Later it was called a thumb and still later, thimble. The first ones were made of iron and brass. The iron ones were clumsy and the brass ones discolored the finger. Thimbles are ordinarily made from thin plates of metal placed in a die and punched into shape. These thin sheets of metal are cut into dies about two inches in diameter. These are heated red hot and struck with a punch into a number of holes, to give the proper shape. The thimble is then trimmed, polished and indented around its outer side with a number of little holes by means of a small wheel. It is then changed into steel by the cementation process, secured tempered and brought to the blue color. With a more expensive article is desired gold and silver are introduced.—Ruralist.

Tobacco Pool An Assured Success

ALREADY A VAST ACREAGE HAS BEEN SIGNED.

A WHIRLWIND CAMPAIGN

Between Now and the Date of Closing the Pool on March 1, the Whole Burley District Will Be Thoroughly Canvassed.

Plans are under way by the Burley Tobacco Society to have a whirlwind campaign during the month of February in the interest of the ten-year pool, and representatives of the society will canvass the whole Burley district in central Kentucky.

The campaign will be one of education, designed to make sure that every grower in every county understands fully the terms and conditions of the new ten-year pooling pledge.

Speeches have been made on the proposed pool heretofore and they have brought forth splendid results. It is the desire of the Executive Committee of the Burley Tobacco Society that every grower in central Kentucky know exactly what the new pooling means and the many benefits it is destined to bestow on those who sign.

Pool Closes March 1.

President Clarence LeBeau says that the new ten-year pool will positively close March 1, and after that date none can get in. Already there are enough signers to make it a go, but it is of course the desire of the Executive Committee that every grower have a chance to get in.

It is especially desirable, the Burley officials say, to have all the old poolers in.

New Pool a Selling Pool.

The new pool is a selling pool, not a holding pool, and it contemplates the manufacture of the Burley Tobacco Society members' own tobacco. It means a sharing in the profits heretofore enjoyed exclusively by the manufacturer. It means going after the real profit end of the tobacco business.

Heretofore the grower in the Burley belt has satisfied himself with raising and selling his tobacco. Under the new pool it is to be manufactured and sold at an additional profit.

Dividends Will Be Declared.

Dividends will be declared quarterly or semi-annually, the Burley Tobacco Company will carry its own insurance, tobacco will be handled in the most scientific way, and every possible saving will be made. Furthermore the new pool is not in restraint of trade, as it only contemplates the signing up of half the land and the grower can sell his tobacco on any market he chooses and get his money promptly minus the small per cent required to pay operating expenses and keep the company together.

Contract Blanket Now Ready.

Contracts may be had on application to the Burley offices in Lexington or from any of the chairmen of the county Boards of Control.

Already a vast acreage has been signed, it is said, and the pool is an assured success.

LOOSE LEAF MARKETS COME TO STAY.

Loose leaf markets are being established throughout the entire Burley belt in Kentucky, and that they have come to stay has only to visit them, see the sales made, note the up-to-date manner of handling and talk with the buyers. The Burley Tobacco Society is establishing loose leaf markets at all central points where they own warehouse properties, and among the towns now having Burley loose leaf markets are Frankfort, Georgetown, Mt. Sterling, Shelbyville, Cynthiana, Williamstown and Horse Cave. Other towns may get these loose leaf markets in the near future.

The Shelby Record, speaking of the loose leaf market recently opened there, says:

"The tobacco raisers are shaking hands with themselves and their neighbors, because loose leaf warehouses have been opened here in Shelbyville, where they can dispose of their crops at small cost to them, at living prices. Just think of it. They get paid 'spot cash' for every pound they bring in, let it be a 'little jag,' or a big crop, they know just as soon as it is weighed how much they will have to pay for selling it. They know what it will cost to sell it, and that there is nothing for freight, drays, storage, insurance or commissions, and that they were not obliged to buy hogheads or pay for pricing. They just haul it to the warehouse and when the tobacco is sold, a slight charge is made; that's all."

"Mr. Banta was one who wondered whether it would be best for him to sell his 14,000 pound crop to a speculator at 8 cents at his barn or bring it to Shelbyville and have it sold at the Shelby Loose Leaf Warehouse. He brought it here, and got a little rise of 15 cents on an average. Many others are having a like experience. The loose leaf sales continue to grow in favor, and the promoters of the enterprise and everybody else is well pleased. More than a million pounds have been sold here already and more than $100,000 have been turned loose here within the past three weeks."

THE BURLEY TOBACCO SOCIETY CASE.

"Judge Hollister of the United States District Court," says Editor Smith K. Burrage of the Oregon Farmer, "decided that the Burley Tobacco Society had violated the Sherman anti-trust law. The decision came in the case of the E. O. Eshelby Tobacco Company against the Society which has been in progress for several days in Cincinnati. This company purchased a part of the 1907 pool at 9 cents a pound. Later it sued the Society for 9 cents a pound, claiming that the tobacco was worth only 5 cents, and in the same suit it asked for triple damages under the Sherman law. It will be left to the jury to say what damages shall be assessed, and at this writing this question has not been submitted."

"While this ruling of Judge Hollister will come as a shock to the farmers all over the country, it was no great surprise to those who have followed the trend of the courts in such matters. Several prominent farmers of Grant county were prosecuted and fined in this same connection. And they had to pay their fines. The Standard Oil Company was fined $25,000, and if any part of it was ever paid, we fail to remember it. If the farmers of Grant county violated any law at all, it was their 'First Offense.'"

The Standard Oil Company was an old, arrogant and powerful—but rich—offender. The American Tobacco Company falls in the same class and when brought before the bar of justice, it is mildly told to go home and take eight months to figure out another way of violating the law. No fines nor imprisonments were imposed. If the farmers have violated the law in organizing the Burley Tobacco Society, as far as this case is concerned, it was their 'First Offense.' They are adjudged guilty, and will no doubt have to pay a fine or go to jail.

"We are not drawing this distinction between new and old offenders in an effort to prove that the 'First Offense' should not be punished, but merely to show the difference between a farmer and a millionaire. The whole machinery of the Government—and the Republican party—was behind the prosecution of the American Tobacco Company. The American Tobacco Company was a trust, that it controlled about 90 per cent of the business in this country, and that it had come into the possession of this business through the most nefarious methods known to modern finance. The case against it was carried to the highest court in the land, and it was dissolved—but nobody believes it has been punished."

"We hope that the Society will carry its case to the Supreme Court, and under the interpretation given to the Sherman anti-trust law by that tribunal, we do not believe that the farmers' organization will be considered as 'unreasonable' in restraint of trade."

BELIEVES IN TEN-YEAR POOL.

The editor of the Dover News says of the new ten-year pool: "The Burley Tobacco Society has made another sale of 1,500,000 pounds of the lowest remaining grades of the 1909 pool at $11.15 per hundred, which is much above the same grades on the market, paid willingly because of the better quality of the 1909 crop and the fact that it is in good condition."

"This, following the recent sale of about fifteen million pounds at $16.50 per hundred, and which is now being delivered, has put a different face on the situation and laid on the shelf the fellows who have been so vociferously predicting, just as they did before the final sale of the 1908 and 1907 crop, that the farmer had gotten 'all he would ever get.' We have always had faith in the judgment of the men who compose the Executive Committee and believed they would, with half a chance, bring the poolers through all right."

"And we are as firmly of the opinion that if the farmers will pay less attention to the chat of those whose interest it is to prevent a pool under the ten-year-manufacture plan and stick together and with their friends of the Burley Tobacco Society, the result will be the death blow to starvation prices for the raw material. The plan is a good one, thoughtfully constructed. It will benefit every tobacco grower in or out of it, but will be of greater benefit to those inside than to those who stay out. The manufacturing clause is the power that will insure always a good price for the tobacco of those inside. Our advice heretofore when followed has brought good results; when ignored, disaster. Take our advice now and get in on this ten-year pool."

STRENGTH IN ORGANIZATION.

The Bracken Chronicle says: "On Thursday, Jan. 11, one of Bracken county's well-known tobacco growers and buyers had a hoghead of tobacco on the Cincinnati brakes, the highest bid for same being about 8 cents, the sale being rejected. This was the day Judge Hollister rendered his opinion, considered unfavorable to the Burley Tobacco Society, in the Eshelby suit, but after the jury returned a verdict favorable to the Burley Tobacco Society, notwithstanding the judge's instructions, tobacco prices jumped again, and on Jan. 17, the same hoghead was sold on the same market at about 17 cents. This instance alone should convince the most skeptical that there is strength in organization."

Florence St. John, one of the most popular opera singers in London ten years ago, is dead.

The Dairy Cow and Fertility.

The dairy farms at the agricultural colleges have many times shown the value of dairy cows to the soil. The Illinois station says that manure is figured at eleven tons per cow annually with cows producing 8,000 pounds of milk. On the 20 acre dairy farm at the university last year cows which were kept in the barn during the summer produced 13 tons of manure per cow. The average value is considered at $1.50 per ton. At the Illinois Agricultural Experiment station, on a three-year rotation of corn, oats and clover, manure has increased the crop yield $1.60 for each ton of manure used, figuring the market value of the crops, for the first three years after it is applied. No consideration is taken of the increased production from the effects of the manure after the first three years. At the Ohio Experiment station the value of the crop yields has been increased $2.34 for each ton of manure used. From the figures above stated, $1.50 a ton is a conservative value on cow manure which has been well cared for. Cows which produce less than 8,000 pounds of milk will produce, on the average, less than 11 tons of manure. Cows producing more than 8,000 pounds of milk will not only produce more manure, but it will be of a better quality, owing to the fact that they are fed more concentrated. For these reasons the value of the manure is lowered 50 cents per cow for every 1,000 pounds' decrease in production of milk below 8,000 pounds, and raised 50 cents per 1,000 pounds' increase in production above 8,000.

Indian Killed on Track.

Near Rochelle, Ill., an Indian went to sleep on a railroad track and was killed by the fast express. He paid for his carelessness with his life. Often is that way when people neglect coughs and colds. Don't risk your life when prompt use of Dr. King's New Discovery will cure them and so prevent a dangerous throat and lung trouble. "It completely cured me in a short time, of a terrible cough that followed a severe attack of Grip," writes J. R. Watts, Floydada, Texas, "and I regained 15 pounds in weight that I had lost." Quick, safe, reliable and guaranteed.—50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free at all dealers.

Richmond, Ky., Feb. 3.—Farmers here say that all stock feed throughout this county is scarcer than ever before known, which they claim principally to be due to so many turning their attention to the growing of tobacco and neglecting other products, and more especially such as sugar cane and the like, to be used as a roughness for cattle.

WARNING TO FARMERS.

Seed Corn Likely to Germinate Poorly Unless Selected by Careful Test.

Specialist From State Experiment Station to Be in Burlington February 23.

It has been demonstrated that the man who tests his seed corn and carefully selects the best from year to year is able to produce a greatly increased yield of corn. A few bushels extra per acre will amount to many dollars in a crop of corn; and this increase in the farmers' income may be brought about without extra expense for labor and without plowing an extra amount of land.

This year, especially, it is something of a problem to find good seed corn in Boone county, owing to unfavorable conditions last fall. A test just made at the High School at Burlington of a dozen ears of corn such as many farmers would plant, gave almost startling results. Five grains from each of the twelve ears were placed in the tester and the table below shows the number that germinated:

1 ear had 5 good grains each.
3 ears had 3 good grains each.
3 ears had 2 good grains each.
4 ears had 1 good grain each.

The total number of grains germinating was exactly 50 per cent of the number tested. This may not be a fair test of the corn of Boone county, but it indicates that the matter should be investigated. This condition is no doubt due to the extremely wet fall which made a great deal of moisture in the corn, followed by the extremely cold winter which froze and killed the germ of life in the grains. Of course seed corn selected in the field and properly dried and put away will have a higher percentage of vitality.

There are a few farmers in Boone county, who test their seed corn every year. It is hoped that many who have not been in the habit of doing so will take advantage of the offer being made by the Boone County High School. Prof. Dix announces that he will make a test of seed for any farmer in the county according to the following plan:

Select a quantity of the best ears for use more than enough to plant your crop. Fasten a numbered tag to each ear. Then carefully remove five grains from each ear taken from the different parts of the ear, not too close to the ear. Place the five grains in an envelope, and number it the same as tag on the ear. Now send the envelope—one to the High School at Lexington, one to Prof. Dix, and within two weeks he will report to you which ears germinate the best or whether the percentage of vitality is so low that it will be advisable to get a different seed. He will also test any other seed that you have for planting—tobacco, clover, timothy, alfalfa, wheat, etc. Merchants who would like to be able to guarantee the vitality of the seed they handle, are invited to send in samples to be tested. Samples of the smaller grain should contain one hundred or more seed.

The management further announces that the Grown-Up-School, which was postponed for one week, will be held Friday, Feb. 23. J. R. Bryant, a specialist from the State Experiment Station, will be at the High School that day to give instructions in scientific methods of farming. All are invited to come and be ready to attend classes at 10 o'clock. Bring dinner and spend a day in an enjoyable and profitable way.

"SHAWN OF SKARROW"

Title of New Book by James Tandy Ellis.

"Shawn of Skarrow" is the title of a new book just from the pen of Kentucky's gifted author, James Tandy Ellis. The character of "Shawn" is well drawn this character uniting rare traits of strength and loveliness. The story throughout is interesting, the description of scenes along the Ohio river of half a century ago being given with a great deal of fidelity to nature. All of those interesting episodes of that day as were found in the old days of the old-time canoeing, fishing, and flatboating are drawn by a master hand. The elements which make this novel really enjoyable, are rather a simple and homely nature, but such as lie close to the heart of everyone and as such will make irrefragable appeal to all who read the book. The work is published by the C. M. Clark Pub. Co., Boston.

Angie McConnell Dead.

A. G. McConnell, who served the High School several years ago as justice of the peace, died at his home near Danville, Boyle county, last week. Mr. McConnell's wife, who survives him, was a daughter of the late Samuel Calvert, of the East Bend neighborhood. Mr. McConnell was an energetic and successful business man and owned a splendid farm and an elegant residence near Danville. He was a prominent member of the Methodist church, and his departure from Boyle county was deplored by the church at East Bend, of which he was a member who gave liberally of his time and money to the church. He had many friends in this county who sympathize with them in their bereavement.

PROPHET TELLS OF DIRE CALAMITIES.

Says Next Summer Will Be The Hottest in Years—Wars And Rumors of War.

Thomas P. Brennan of Massachusetts, who gives credentials as a natural-born prophet, sends this catalog of the happenings of the next summer, beginning with July 1st.

Mr. Brennan forecasts: "This will be the hottest summer that has been known in the United States for a great many years almost unbearable. There will be great forest fires in Canada and the United States. Pennsylvania will suffer from fire and flood. Chicago, New York, Boston and London will suffer from fires. There will be dreadful storms along the Atlantic coast to the English channel, with shipwrecks and loss of life.

Tidal waves will wash the southern coast which will go miles inland and destroy towns and villages. There will be an earthquake that will shake the city of Washington. There will be a war in Europe, Africa and China.

China will be in rebellion from one end to the other. Africa will be in a flame of war. All nations will prepare for war. There will be dreadful times in England, strikes, rioting, bloodshed and warlike conditions on one end of the other. The new commonwealth will be like a moving picture show.

LIFE SENTENCE

Returned by The Boone County Jury in the Murder Trial at Williamstown.

The jury in the case of the Commonwealth against J. M. Webster, charged with the murder of Samuel H. Hebron, returned a verdict of life in prison for Webster. The jury was composed of J. B. Gaines, Burlington, J. L. Day, Idlewild, Lucken Love, Union, J. J. Duncan, Burlington, J. W. Afterlick, Union, W. R. Garnett, Hebron, John Collier, Hebron, Samuel H. Burlington, C. L. Tanner, Hebron, Eli Borders, Burlington, E. H. Surface, Gunpowder.

Last Monday night after having the case about two hours, the jury returned a verdict sending Webster to the penitentiary for life. The jury had no trouble whatever in reaching the verdict. After being discharged the jury made up a purse of several dollars and presented to Webster's daughter, who was a waitress at the hotel where they were quartered. The jurymen say that John L. Vest, of Walton, who assisted the prosecution, made a masterful argument.

Getting Stock onto Full Feed.

A mistake sometimes made by the inexperienced, and also by others who are in a hurry to get their stock ready for the market, is in putting their animals onto full feed quickly. The hogs or steers that always do the best and make the most money for the feeder are the animals that are kept on partial feed for a while, or until their stomachs have become accustomed to a steady grain diet. The same will hold true in feeding any stock on the farm.

In feeding any stock, begin lightly and very gradually increase the ration so as to avoid setbacks. Every setback an animal gets means not only a waste of food and time, but also results in a derangement of the digestive apparatus. A fattening animal is a machine for using grain to the best advantage. The best way to get the material of the farm and working it over into a more finished and concentrated product. The better the product is kept in the more successfully and profitably this can be done. It is steady feeding, not spasmodic feeding, that counts in finishing an animal. W. P. in Ind. Farmer.

Dudley Rouse, After a Life of Nearly Four Score Years Passes Away.

GONE TO HIS REWARD.

With the presidency at annual elections. His administration was at all times along the lines of sound banking and in accord with the rules that had made his life a success in the business world.

Dudley Rouse spent his entire life within the limits of Boone county, residing at no time to exceed six miles from the place of his birth, and his life was an honor to her people and one worthy of emulation. He was a man of a retiring disposition, and to realize and appreciate his real worth it was necessary to become acquainted with him. He was ever ready to contribute to good cause, and a deserving appeal never went unheeded by him. In his death the county, and this community especially, has lost one of its best citizens, whose taking away is deeply deplored.

After a brief service by Rev. Evans, Presbyterian of Walton, at the residence at two o'clock last Monday afternoon, the Masons took charge of the remains and conducted the burial service of that order, depositing the remains in the vault in the Odd-Fellows cemetery west of town, to await final interment. The pallbearers were J. C. Revill, G. G. Hughes, Edgar Cropper, W. J. Rice, P. P. Walton and W. L. Riddell, and the ceremony was in charge of Grand Senior Warden Orie S. Ware, of Covington and 60 Masons were in line, quite a number of lodges being represented.

The floral offerings were profuse and beautiful, and came from friends far and near.

Dudley Rouse was born near Florence, this county, September 8th, 1835, and departed this life at his home in Burlington at 10:15 p. m., Friday February 9th, 1912, aged 76 years, five months and six days, death resulting from heart trouble.

He was a son of the late Benjamin and Virinda Southern Rouse and was one of a family of five children, three sons—Dudley W. L. and James, and two daughters—Isabelle, who married William Walton, and Victoria, who married William M. Conner. Of this family W. L., who resides in this vicinity is the only survivor.

His boyhood days were spent in a most industrious manner on a farm, where the hardships of the pioneer farming life of sixty years ago developed a sturdy and honest purpose, that was a leading characteristic of his long life; the problems of which he encountered and mastered in a quiet and unassuming manner.

After spending about eleven years in the mercantile business in Florence, Benjamin Rouse in 1851 bought and moved to the farm now owned and occupied by his son, W. L. Rouse, out on the Bellevue pike. While living there and about the close of the Civil war Dudley Rouse, James Rouse and their brother-in-law, W. M. Conner, formed a partnership and purchased the general store of the Longmore Brothers in Burlington, which occupied the present postoffice and other rooms in that building. William Conner sold his interest to Dudley and James Rouse.

They purchased the southwest corner of Washington and Jefferson streets, razed the old building thereon and erected the two story brick business building that occupies that site.

In a year or two after the firm moved into its new quarters, James Rouse died, and in the final settlement of his estate, Dudley Rouse became sole owner of the business house and the stock of merchandise, and continued to conduct the general store in the most satisfactory and successful manner until February 1903, when he disposed of his stock of goods to M. L. Riddell.

In 1869 Mr. Rouse was appointed postmaster in Burlington and held the position continuously for twenty-eight years. It was about the beginning of his administration that Burlington was given a daily mail service.

September 4th, 1873, Dudley Rouse and Miss Eliza Blyth, daughter of Arthur and Sarah Blyth, of Burlington, were united in marriage and as husband and wife their relations were the most congenial. To them was born one child, Honorable Arthur E. Rouse, present representative from this district in Congress. During Mr. Rouse's last illness his devoted and faithful wife, and loving son were at his bedside, and his devoted wife administered to his every want, relieving all in their power to alleviate his suffering.

On August 15th, 1883, Dudley Rouse was made a Mason in Burlington Lodge No. 364, and was one of its best and most substantial members from that date until his death. On December 27, 1889, he was elected Treasurer of the lodge, to which office he was elected at every succeeding election since, a mark of the very high esteem in which he was held by his brothers.

On January 4th, 1904, Dudley Rouse was elected Deposit Bank of the Boone County Deposit Bank to postmaster in Burlington and resigned that position in order to spend his winters in Florida. As the head of that institution Mr. Rouse's business relations were pleasant that the board of directors never considered the name of another person in connection with the presidency at annual elections. His administration was at all times along the lines of sound banking and in accord with the rules that had made his life a success in the business world. DIES IN INDIANA.

Omar F. Popham Dies After A Lingering Illness.

Omer F. Popham was born in this county March 23, 1837, and died at his home in Dearborn county, Indiana December 29th, 1911, aged 74 years, nine months and six days.

While he was not a member of any church he lived a life worthy of emulation and when he came to face the great change that comes to us all he said to his brother "I would like to live but if it be God's will I am not afraid to die." To all who knew him best his life was without any serious faults. Kind and considerate to all his friends and family he was especially kind to his mother.

He had been in failing health for some months but was hopeful and confident to the last. He talked of his plans for the future just a few days before his death.

He made preparations for his funeral and the ceremony was held at his home in Dearborn county, Indiana, December 30th, 1911, and was conducted by the Rev. J. C. Revill, of Walton, who was a member of the lodge he was a faithful attendant and his death was a great loss to his family and friends.

He was upright and honest in all his dealings and of him we can truly say, "He was a good man."

He leaves a mother, three brothers, three sisters, three nephews, two nieces and a host of other relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

The Ten Year Pool.

Much has been said and written regarding the ten year pool of the Burley Tobacco. We have never examined the contract or agreement between the growers and the organized company. However, a surface view of the proposition would hardly incline one to the belief that a sufficient number of growers could be induced to sign up to make the thing a success. Recent history regarding the one-year pool is not of a nature to incline anyone to believe that the proposition of his belief to great faith in the new movement. The question which naturally arises, is how will it be possible to procure signatures in plenty to new year or ten year, agreement when the growers withdrew from the one year agreement and refused to sign up. For that reason, and for certain others regarding the recent sale of certificates or warehouse receipts, it seems altogether improbable that any effective crop can be neither desired or maintained.—Warsaw Independent.

First La Grippe Then Bronchitis. That was the case with W. S. Hall, McCleary, Ky. "My wife was taken down with a severe attack of la grippe, which run into bronchitis. She coughed as though she had consumed a barrel of gunpowder and could not sleep at night. The first bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound gave her so much relief that she continued using it until she was permanently cured." For sale at Jones' drug store, Walton, Ky.

Bank Presidents Dead.

Each of the local banks has lost its president by death since the last issue of the Recorder. The remains of Dudley Rouse, president of the Boone County Deposit Bank, was placed in the vault last Monday afternoon, and about the time the ceremonies closed, B. W. Adams, president of the Peoples Deposit Bank, passed away.

BID TO FARMERS.

General Invitation To Farmers Institute February 27-29.

Women Interested In Topics Are Likewise Welcome.

Frankfort, Feb. 12.—All farmers of Kentucky and women interested in the general subject of agriculture have been especially invited to Frankfort for the State Farmers' Institute, Feb. 27, 28 and 29. Following is the official call issued to-day by J. W. Newman, Commissioner of Agriculture:

"To the farmers of Kentucky: You are notified that the State Farmers' Institute, as provided for by law, is called to assemble at Frankfort February 27, 28 and 29.

"All delegates will be duly notified through this office, but this notice is sent to the public in order that all farmers, irrespective of whether delegates or not, may be cordially invited and be accorded the privilege of the floor; in fact are urged to be present at this meeting. As it is understood by your commission, the law does not contemplate that just one person from each county should attend this meeting, but that all persons interested in the development of agricultural resources of the state who desire to attend should be given the opportunity and the invitation to come to this meeting.

"Women are especially invited and February 28 will be, in a great measure, 'ladies' day.' Some of the best lecturers on 'Household Economics,' 'Home Improvement' and 'Women's Place in Agriculture' have been secured, and particular attention will be given to interesting the women of Kentucky in the improvement of home conditions, especially in the rural districts.

"Low railroad rates are expected."

VENERABLE CONFEDERATE

Answers The Final Roll Call. B. W. Adams Passes Away

Bluford W. Adams, ex-County Clerk, died at his home a mile and a quarter out on the Florence pike last Monday afternoon at 10:45 a. m., after a long illness of about two weeks, of a complication of diseases. He was conveyed to Big Bone church yesterday, where the funeral services were conducted in the presence of a very large crowd of the friends and relatives of the deceased.

In the passing away of Bluford Adams there passed to rest a heart warm in all its generous impulses, true to every profession of friendship and kind and benevolent through all its purposes. There was plain in his make-up the finer qualities which portray the Kentucky gentleman, enough of the old-fashioned frankness and cordiality to make you feel a freedom and confidence in his association, enough of that genuine hospitality to give you the assurance of its naturalness and sincerity, and that hospitality he spoke itself through every day of his life, whether within his home or out in the walks of the world.

At home with his wife, his neighbors and his people he was an insipier of happiness, ever ready to extend friendship and hospitality to all who sought the people of the county fondly cherish his memory. There and here his genial company will be missed for all time, and while the county he loved mourns his loss, it must not be forgotten that his loving wife and relatives have sustained an irreparable one; and many friends deeply sympathize with them in this their hour of bereavement. His biography will appear in the next issue of the Recorder.

The Raspberry Strawberry.

An Illinois grower states that through the accidental cross between the red raspberry and the strawberry there has been developed a plant which promises to become important. The cross was made by trees carrying the pollen from a bed of strawberries to a red raspberry patch near by and the berry resulted from the seed that fell on the ground. The berry is very large, some growing to the size of a hulled walnut. In shape it is like the raspberry with a hollow center like the raspberry, and resembles this fruit to some extent.

It grows on a bush about three feet high, the stalk being covered with thorns. It has a beautiful red and requires sugar and cream to bring out its flavor, which is peculiar to itself, slightly resembling the mulberry, and there is a lingering delicate after-flavor.

It is said to be a large producer, and requires little cultivation. The vines are mowed, and to the ground late in the fall. In the spring, and the new shoots that come up bear the same season.

Mrs. Carrie W. Gaines Dead.

Mrs. W. A. Gaines died at the Good Samaritan Hospital, Cincinnati, last Monday about 3 a. m. She had submitted to a surgical operation a few days before and it was thought she was getting along nicely until a few hours before her death. Mrs. Gaines was daughter of the late A. G. Winston, and was greatly beloved by all her acquaintances, she being a noble christian lady. She is survived by her husband and two sons, Bernard of Detroit, Michigan; Dr. B. W. Gaines of Cincinnati; and one brother, Atty. C. A. Winston, of Chicago and three sisters, Misses Mattie, Anna and Katie Winston, of Cincinnati. Funeral at the chapel at Highland cemetery yesterday at 2 p. m. The bereaved husband and sons have the sympathy of all who know them.

Pure Milk.

The Colorado agricultural college in a bulletin says that the careless use of the pail is the chief cause of impure milk. It says, "The milk passes from the udder to another pail, and other utensils are usually washed with hot water and soap. But after ordinary washing there will be left clinging to such utensils many bacteria which are ready to develop as soon as fresh milk is added to the pail. Proper food and conditions. Undoubtedly most of these bacteria are lactic acid producers, and although harmless will cause an early souring of the milk."

These various contaminating factors can be largely lessened or completely eliminated. The most of the bacteria from the fore milk can be thrown out by rejecting the first few streams. Dust in the air can be reduced by exercising care as to the time of feeding and bedding. The number of germs from the animal and the milk can be reduced by cleaning and maintaining the udder and the flanks of the animal by using a pail with a small opening and by requiring the milker to wash his hands and use clean dry clean clothes. Scalding or scalding water in washing the dairy utensils will entirely exclude the germs from this source.

TOBACCO SALES.

Williamstown, Feb. 13.—The Burley Tobacco Company's loose-leaf warehouses will hold its first sale this day. A great mass of tobacco has arrived, more than fifty wagonloads being unloaded at the warehouse to-day. From upward of 1,000 pounds to the hundred thousand pounds on the floor Thursday morning. There has been an increase in the price here, buyers paying an average price of from $9 to $14 cents a pound for their crops. Many buyers expect to offer their purchases on the loose-leaf market.

Glasgow, Feb. 13.—The sales on the loose-leaf tobacco market here to-day took a sensational turn when tobacco sold for $36.50 a hundred. Until to-day $30 was the top price for a good crop of $6.50 was altogether unexpected. Several crops averaged $23 and as high as $24.50 a hundred, but the record to-day is the best of the season.

Danville, Feb. 13.—It is believed that the State's tobacco record was broken in this city to-day, when 1,750 pounds of tobacco at an average of $33.35 a hundred. There were three baskets that sold for $40, $11 and $42 a hundred.

Carlisle, Feb. 13.—Loose leaf tobacco sales opened here for the week with the strongest market of the season. Prices ranging from $10 for frozen to $12 for colody leaf. The best crop average was $24.

Shelbyville, Feb. 12.—The tobacco market for the week opened strong, with some exceptional crop averages at the Shelby house, which held 100,000 pounds at from $5 to $25 with a general average of $12.50.

Georgetown, Feb. 13.—Good prices prevailed at the sale of 70,000 pounds of tobacco at the loose-leaf warehouse here to-day. The grade was ordinary but they brought from $2.50 to $24.

Mayville, Feb. 12.—Total loose leaf tobacco sales here today amounted to 344,500 pounds, selling at from $3 to $26 per hundred.

Lexington, Feb. 12.—About 600,000 pounds of loose leaf Burley tobacco was sold at warehouses here today at prices ranging from 34 to 2-1-2 cents a pound.

Richmond, Feb. 12.—A total of 150,000 pounds of loose leaf tobacco was sold at both houses here today at prices from $4 to $27.00.

Richmond, Feb. 13.—A total of 125,000 pounds were sold at the two houses here to-day at an average of $10.

Winchester, Feb. 12.—Between 75,000 and 100,000 pounds of tobacco were sold at the Planter's House.

METHOD OF SETTING GRAPES

Best System of Training Is Modification of Munson Trellis—Some Nitrogen Is Needed.

(By W. F. MASSEY.)
For vineyard planting set the vines eight feet apart in rows ten feet apart. Cut back to two eyes and train up a single stem to a stake the first year. Then the best system of training is a modification of the Munson trellis. Set posts along the rows and make them five feet high. At top of each post nail a cross-piece of 2x4 scantling two and a half feet long, projecting equally on each side. Stretch three wires horizontally, one along the tops of the posts and one along each end of the crossbar. Then take two arms, one each way from the stem of the vine along the central wire, the next season these arms are shortened to four feet and fruited, and at the same time a cane is taken from near the stem to take the place of these arms the following season and they are cut out. The fruiting branches hang over the outer wires and the grapes underneath are better protected than on a vertical trellis. I have found that on a trellis like this there was less rot on unsprayed vines than on sprayed ones on a vertical trellis. Do not put any manure or fertilizer in contact with the roots at planting, but manure on the surface, after setting the vines. A fertilizer strong in phosphoric acid and potash is best, though to make a good growth in the young vines some nitrogen will, of course, be needed.

CURES FOR RABBIT NUISANCE

Two Excellent Methods of Ridding Orchards of Injurious Little Pest in Winter Time.

(By E. L. STARNES.)
Last winter the rabbits worked on a lot of trees for me. I got a full fur of cow manure and filled with water until it was about as thick as thin flour gravy. Take white wash brush and smear on trees for eighteen inches or two feet. Stir up the manure, after setting the vines. A fertilizer strong in phosphoric acid and potash is best, though to make a good growth in the young vines some nitrogen will, of course, be needed.

Good Box Trap.

haven't had a tree bitten by a rabbit since and where they cut the bark off nearly around the tree I put it on thick and every one of the trees lived. Another excellent method of getting rid of the little pests is the use of a box trap. Any one handy with tools can make one.

PROTECTION OF APPLE TREES

Health and Longevity of Many Less Hardy Types Depends to Great Extent on Nature of Shelter.

That the health and longevity of many of the less hardy types of apple trees are largely dependent upon the way they are protected has been pretty plainly demonstrated in the case of a Fameuse tree from which the writer picked the fruit last fall, says a writer. The tree in question stands on the north side of a shed five feet from a shed which effectively protects its trunk and lower limbs from the winter sun, says a writer in an exchange. Not only has the tree made a prodigious growth, but it is remarkably thrifty and sound. Twenty feet to the north of it was exposed to the sun, is another tree of the same variety, which has been badly hit with sun scald, and it is already sick to death. We have watched these trees for a number of years, and are convinced that, while some other factors may have played a part, the difference in their condition today is due to the protection they have had.

It is this principle that makes many orchardists in northern states favor the rather close planting of apple trees in rows north and south. This serves in a measure to give the protection mentioned.

FIGHT SAN JOSE SCALE NEXT

Injurious Pest Can Be Checked If Trees Are Sprayed While Leaves Are Off—Good Solution.

San Jose scale, a pest which is spreading over this country with amazing rapidity, can be checked, says Dr. T. J. Headlee, state entomologist at the Kansas Agricultural college, if orchard owners will spray now while the leaves are off the trees. Spraying with a lime and sulphur solution any time while the trees are dormant is advised by Dr. Headlee, but he believes that the best results will follow if the application is made before the buds begin to swell.

Other solutions may be used as sprays, but the lime-sulphur mixture is especially recommended because it also will kill scab and fungus growth. To prepare the spray, 20 pounds of lime and 15 pounds of sulphur are allowed to 50 gallons of water. Put ten gallons of water in an iron kettle and add 20 pounds of unslaked lime. Boil, adding water when necessary to keep the mass from spluttering. When the lime has slaked into a paste, until the mixture assumed a dark red color, strain it through a cloth and add the 50 gallons of spray. There are other solutions on the market already prepared that are effective. Spray with great care, says Dr. Headlee, as it is only by contact with the poison that the scale is killed.

Ordinarily, one spraying in a year is sufficient, but where the pest is well established it is well to spray now and then again later on in the winter. Since one scale can produce nearly 3 1/2 millions of young in a single summer, it is evident that if the pest is not combated promptly it will soon destroy an orchard.

NEW CROSS OF SMALL FRUITS

Illinois Grower Accidentally Developed Raspberry-Strawberry—Promises to Become Popular.

An Illinois grower states that through an accidental cross between the red raspberry and the strawberry there has been developed a plant which promises to become important. The cross was made by bees carrying the pollen from a bed of strawberries to a red raspberry patch nearby, and the berry resulted from the seed that fell on the ground.

The berry is very large, some growing to the size of a hulled walnut, in shape it is like the strawberry, with a hollow center like the raspberry, and resembles this fruit to some extent.

It grows on a bush about three feet high, the stalk being covered with thorns. It is of a beautiful red and requires sugar and cream to bring out its flavor, which is peculiar to itself, slightly resembling the mulberry, and there is a lingering delicate after-flavor.

It is said to be a large producer, and requires little cultivation. The vines are mowed close to the ground late in the fall, or in the spring, and the new shoots that come up bear the same season.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES

If you plant pear trees in rich soil you invite blight. Old and many young trees are infested with the woolly aphis.

We cannot longer raise-paying apple crops unless we spray.

The lime-sulphur mixture is a good remedy for the oyster-shell scale.

It is better to give the orchard clean cultivation than to try to raise crops in it.

If the garden is fall plowed it means you can plant at least a week earlier next spring.

Fruit trees should never be planted on the lawn, as they cannot be profitably worked.

If you buy your seed potatoes this year, look at them closely, and if there is a sign of scab, reject them.

In very cold weather, cover the barrels of potatoes and frost with two thicknesses of straw or grain sacks.

The hardest grape of all is the Concord. There may be some of better quality, but none can stand so much grief.

Expert orchardists recommend seedling the orchard to remove clover—or try to be plowed down the following spring.

Wood ashes are valuable to spread around fruit trees for small fruits and vegetables; they should not be wasted.

Clean out the henhouse and put the cleanings on the garden this fall. Next spring you will wonder what makes things grow so fast.

For mosses and lichens on old fruit and shade trees, spray when leaves are off. Spray in the middle of a mild, clear day, when bark is dry.

Remember rabbits have just as sharp teeth this year as ever. They will surely gnaw those fruit trees if you give them half a chance.

In putting manure about young trees, keep it away from the trunk or you will provide a harbor for field mice and gnawed trunks will be the result.

Wives Forget—Mothers Don't

According to the warden of a large penitentiary, the only love that lasts; the only love that is proof against absence, and shame, and disgrace, is mother love.

This man, who has had many years' experience with convicted criminals and their families says: "The first year that a man is in a penitentiary his wife writes to him every day. She keeps the mail bag with her, and the second year she writes to him two or three times a week. The third year she writes to him once a week, then the letters begin to come farther and farther apart, until they cease entirely, and by the fourth year he does not hear from her at all."

"But whatever schedule the man's mother adopts at the beginning of his term for writing to him she keeps up. He may be in prison for ten or twenty years, but at the end of his time his mother's letters will be coming to him with the same regularity as they did at first."

"When the wife's letters cease to come to her husband, we know that she has forgotten him, that she has ceased to love him, that she has made new interests, and, perhaps married again. But when a mother's letters quit coming to her son, we know that she is dead."

Was there ever a more beautiful or tragic epic of mother love than that which this warden of a penitentiary shadows forth in his cynical comparison between the two loves of a woman?

The wife forgets, but the mother remembers. The wife tires in time, but the mother never wearies. The wife's love perishes for want of food to live upon, the mother's love can exist on a single crumb. The world draws the wife back again into its distractions and amusements; all of the world for the mother is bounded by the stone walls in which her son is imprisoned.

Nor is this strange. The love of a wife is made up of many things, of passion, that turns themselves out, of illusions that perish, of deals that break and shatter. But a mother's love for her child is bone of her bone, and flesh of her flesh. It is her flesh. It is a part of her very life, and so long as she lives nothing can destroy it.

Women love men for many reasons. These are fierce loves founded on physical attractions that must be daily nurtured on the thrill of a hand clasp, or the ecstasy of a kiss, or else they die. Women who love like this will follow a man to the very gates of a prison swearing that their love will win a thousand years, if need be, faithfully for him. They are the ones who storm his cell with letters in the early days of imprisonment, but once they learn of his presence, his spell for them is broken and in a little while they forget.

There are other women who can endure misery. They turn as irresistibly toward the gay things and the bright things of life, as a flower turns toward the sun. If their husbands are poor, doomed creatures serving their term in the penitentiary, clothed in hideous stripes, forever an outcast among his fellow men, it is not their fault that they lack the courage to endure it.

Such a woman may have wept her heart out as she said goodbye to her husband when he entered that prison, but she will not believe herself, that she would be faithful to him to the end, but her love dies, dragged to death by her effort to forget the black shadow that hangs over her life.

There are still other women, weak, clinging creatures, who lack the strength to stand alone, and who must have some man to whom to lavish their shallow affections. These are the women who have hysterics at their husband's funerals and marry within the year, and who are torn fainting from their husband's arms when they are sent to prison.

There are still other women, who are not so much devoted to the law that gives a convict's wife an automatic divorce. It is easy enough for a man to win a woman's love, but keeping it is another matter, and it is not difficult to see why the wife of a convict should cease to care for him. Indeed, the marvel is when she is able to love him, the black gray light of a prison cell.

For one thing she sees him bereft of all personal attractiveness in the most repulsive garb that human ingenuity can devise. For another, he is shorn of all illusion. His sin, his weakness, his crime is laid bare before her eyes. She can no longer believe him, no longer respect him. She knows him for the poor contemptible miserable, guilty wretch that he is.

Finally there is his sin against her that stands between them. Whatever the wrong he has done society, he has done her a manifold greater wrong. Wherever she goes so long as she lives she is branded as a convict's wife. In the first flush of her sympathy for him she may not regard this, but when the prison doors have changed to behind the man who has her husband and who has put this stigma upon her, when she sees people draw their skirts away from her and she hears the whisper that hisses through society when her name is mentioned, she begins to ask herself why she should love this man who has done her such harm. And when love begins to question, the life has gone out of it, and it is already sick unto death.

The mere fact that a wife's love for a man must have something to feed upon, something to hang itself upon, some reason for being, and that a mother's love asks nothing, but just the blessed privilege of loving, is the most wonderful possible illustration of the difference between the love of a wife and mother. Dorothy Dix, in Indianapolis Star.

The Ferocious Rabbit.

A Kansas Dispatch says: "A dozen farmers are missing in Western Kansas, and it is believed that they have been carried off by the jack rabbits to their dens in the sandhills. The shortage of vegetable food has caused the jacks to become carnivorous, and it is feared that many more fatalities will be reported of lone travelers being killed and eaten. But the worst of it is that farm houses have been attacked by the jack rabbits while the men are away with firearms."

"In Stevens and Reno counties jack rabbits carrying bags of human skulls have appeared in the streets of the County. Citizens requested that the skulls be bought at 100 cents each. If the people of the East are to know the ravages of the jack rabbits why not tell them all the truth? Why keep part of it back? The devastation and horror, the suffering and terror following in the wake of the raids of the jack rabbits have not been equalled in the history of this country except in the raid of the devilish Indians who formerly massacred our settlers."

A New York juror was discharged because he thought the premeditation with which the accused was charged with killing his victim was a new fangled sort of weapon. And yet Gotham revels in tales of rural ignorance.

The Ideal Fireless Cook Stove

An automatic maid that never grows tired or careless—never burns the food, never wants a day out, never leaves you, demands no wages—that relieves you of more than half your kitchen work, saves four-fifths of your fuel bill and cooks the most delicious meals you ever tasted.

Roasts, Bakes, Steams, Stews, Fries, Boils

Takes the drudgery out of the kitchen work. Makes the food more wholesome and delicious. Saves four-fifths of the fuel bill. No other Fireless Cooker in the world is so substantially built, so handsome in appearance, so thoroughly efficient in operation as the ideal.

No other Fireless Cooker has or can have our Patented Water Seal. Read its description carefully.

The Ideal has a "Water Seal" Top. No other cooker has a Water Seal Top. The steam from the cooker condenses and fills the Water Seal, thus locking the cooker at an absolute cooking point. The cooking heat cannot escape. It is held there to the full period of the cooking time. Thus the Ideal cooks faster, cooks better and keeps the food hot longer than any other Fireless Cooker. No number of tops nor their shape can do the work equal to the Water Seal in our cooker.

Aluminum-Lined, Water-Sealed Top, Perfectly Insulated, Beautifully Finished. No other Fireless like it. Carefully built inside.

The cooker is more carefully built up on the inside by necessary reinforcements than you will find in any other cooker—those invisible necessities are all in the Ideal—finishing touches that are necessary, but not to be found in other cookers. It will do everything we claim for it. The IDEAL is not a Luxury; it is a Necessity, because ITS USE IS AN ECONOMY.

There is about a mile of road between Rabbit Hash and East Bend that could and should be piked, as it connects all of East Bend with the Rabbit Hash and Courierville pike. Can it be built and what can be said to spur the people to a doing State? Boys, we dare you to do it.

Farm Production and Pessimism

Occasionally some one breaks into the press in alarm lest the farmers of the United States are going to starve the people.

J. J. Hill has sounded the tocsin along this line in cereal crop shortage, and now the Wall Street Journal says we are on our breeding herds of cattle, and a whole lot of people will soon be without their sirloin, or even chuck steaks.

These alarmists are unmindful of several things in farm production, and do not quite understand the capabilities of the American farmer or the things that move him when the demand comes.

Some years ago when wheat went down to 40 cents a bushel, wheat production fell off tremendously. If it did not pay the farmer to produce it at that price, he had the land and the skill to do so, but it didn't pay. Note also when corn went from 20 to 60 cents a bushel how the farmer got up, and even now he has increased corn production ten to fifteen bushels per acre. We mean the wide-awake farmer who knows how to better methods.

readily, did this low average farmer, who, like the gospel-poor we always have with us.

As to beef farmers of the corn-growing states they have been biding their time till Uncle Sam quits furnishing free pastures on the public lands to grow ranch beef at little cost to the element of the public lands and narrower cattle ranges have been about in the ratio of the shortage in beef production. Corn-growing land worth from $100 to $250 per acre could be put to use in beef production. Corn-cattle, and hence the decline in number of beef cattle.

Note also that when eggs and poultry doubled in value a year ago, when the demand is large and increased greatly, it is the way the farmers have, and, indeed, not unlike the ways of business men. When a thing doesn't pay them they turn to something that does. The pessimistic people need not be alarmed about short crops and less beef. When the demand is large enough to make paying prices for all these things, the farmers will get busy and increase their business means. When a thing doesn't pay them they turn to something that does. The pessimistic people need not be alarmed about short crops and less beef.

SOME FACTS ABOUT SLEEP.

Caused by a Withdrawal of Blood From the Brain, Says Modern Physiology.

All the organs of life rest in some way or other. The heart has an interval of rest between each combined act of contraction and expansion and the beginning of a fresh act. Between each expiration of the lungs and the succeeding inspiration there is a period of repose. Physiologists have calculated that the heart ceases during about one-fourth of the time.

Certain of the other organs suspend their activity in part during sleep. Old physiologists supposed that sleep was caused by the pressure of the blood on the brain. But modern physiology, with a tendency to regard the brain as the origin of all force and of all functions of the body, inclines to the view that sleep is caused by a withdrawal of blood from the brain.

As a rule, the larger the brain the more sleep it requires. Webster went to bed at nine o'clock and rose at five. General Grant used to say, during his campaigns, "I can do nothing without nine hours' sleep."

A curious trait has marked men of large brains—that of sleeping fitfully. Bonaparte used to throw himself on the ground and go to sleep within a space of two minutes. Pitt was a sound sleeper, and slept night after night in the house of commons while his colleagues watched the debate and roused him when it was necessary that he should speak.

HE DEPENDED ON HIS WIFE

How the Near-sighted Old Man Almost Slept Himself to Death, Never Eating.

It seems that an old man with some property had married an elderly lady. The lady was a sprightly dame, executive, lively and keen. The bridegroom could not see more than an inch beyond his nose, and he was not beyond of hearing, too. So he depended a good deal on his wife, you understand. He'd wake up in the morning and wonder if it wasn't time to get up for breakfast. So he'd slide out of bed and look into his wife's room. If she was up, he'd begin dressing. If she was not, he'd huddle up, he'd go back and have another nap. Well, the lady got on to this habit of his. She fixed up a dummy out of bedclothes one morning just before she went downstairs. The old man came into the room an hour later, squinted at the bed and said, "Anna's still asleep," and went right back to the feathers. After he had slept awhile he took another observation. Same business.

It was ten days before he found out how his wife was fooling him. He came near sleeping himself to death, meanwhile. He never had a meal and he got weaker and weaker, but he never got up. He didn't know it was morning yet. And the old lady had the time of her life; she had saved $14.36 in groceries alone.

Higgins, the driver of the pie wagon, told us this. And he swears it's true, but we swear not at all.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Beware of Cousins

Cousins are not as simple as they seem. The very fact of being a cousin, or having a cousin, is complicated. The liaison-faire of cousinship is both eluding and deluding—cousins will be cousins, even if you did not choose them. They can borrow money from you, visit you without being asked, tell people they belong to your family, contest your will, even fall in love with you—and a cousin once removed is twice as apt to. Never completely trust a cousin—never depend on his not doing any of these things. Never take him for granted. The "cousinly kiss" may or may not mean what it means. And cousins always do kiss—it's part of being cousins.

(Not that cousins need necessarily prove perilous. Once in a blue moon they invite you to Europe, or leave you money, but that almost always takes an aunt or an uncle.)—Atlantic.

Reinforced Concrete of Old Rome.

Although concrete has been used for many centuries, it is generally supposed that reinforced concrete is a modern invention. This, however, has been disproved, according to Popular Mechanics by the finding of bronze reinforcing rods in the concrete roof of an ancient Roman tomb, and in the discovery of reinforced concrete in the construction of one of the walls of the old palace of the Louvre, Paris. The reinforced concrete in the latter dates back only 300 or 400 years, but created much comment because the walls were thought to consist entirely of ashlar and quarry stone. The discovery that the stone casing concealed a core composed in part of reinforced concrete was made while workmen were piercing the wall for an elevator installation.

England's Oldest Newspaper.

Besides being the government's best journalistic property, the London Gazette is also the oldest existing English newspaper. It published its first number in 1665. In that troubled year the court was at Oxford on account of the plague and the paper bore the name of the Oxford Gazette in consequence, not changing to its present title until the twenty-fourth number. We can get some idea of the cost of running it from the statement of one of its rivals that the rival's charge for "entertaining spies for information" was $1,500 in the first year.

STATE NEWS.

The Leader led the first fight against the open saloons in Fulton many years ago because the saloonkeeper undertook to bulldoze and run over everybody. It afterward advocated the return of the high license system, believing that our citizens had been taught a lesson and would make Mr. Saloonkeeper observe the law. The passage of the county unit bill means that no licensed saloons will ever again operate in Fulton. Now let's all get together, put aside prejudices of long standing and rid our town of the bootlegger, blind tiger and "speak easy" bunch.—Fulton Leader.

A Russellville man showed the Times a check for 50 cents from the receiver of the Owensboro Bank & Trust Company. The gentleman in question had $50 on deposit in that institution when it failed. After several years 50 cents is his part of the deposit. The president of this bank would mail a letter that would have to travel on Sunday. This depositor knew that fact. Yet, knowing the president was plotting to make the deposit. He ought to have lost his money.—Russellville Times.

Eugene Sharp, son of W. H. Sharp, of near Salvisa, who has been all over the West, the Orient to Alaska, the Philippines, and has undergone many adventures in his travels, is home again after a long absence. Last Sunday he was visiting his old friend, Mr. J. T. Lyons, who lives on the old John John L. Armstrong farm, and his attention was called by Mr. Lyons to a peculiar rock that he had taken from under the roots of an old tree that had been blown up and which he had brought to the house because it sparkled a little. Knowing Mr. Sharp had been a miner in the West, he casually showed it to him and asked him what it was. Mr. Sharp examined it and pronounced it gold pyrites and said it would assay $2,000 a ton. Of course, great interest was at once taken in finding the place where this particular rock came from, and doubts it has been discovered by this time.—Harrodsburg Leader.

The Advance of Conservation.

A timber company which has purchased 250,000 acres of land in Western North Carolina will place the entire tract under the supervision of the United States Forestry Bureau. This is a departure from the methods usually employed by timber companies. It is significant of the advance of the conservation movement.

Another feature of the enterprise will be the complete utilization of all the sawdust and other waste from the several mills that are to be operated. The sawdust will be used at a central power plant where it is to be converted into electric power to run all the mills and the sawdust from which the waste is produced will be used to operate a large ground pulp mill. The 250,000 acres of land is covered with practically virgin timber. Ordinarily when mill owners purchase a tract of timber they proceed to cut it down ruthlessly and saw it up with the greatest possible expedition. This will not be the policy of the North Carolina company. It is proposed to exercise judgment in the selection of the end that a supply of timber may be maintained indefinitely.

The growing scarcity of timber in some parts of the country is bringing the mill men to the realization that they must give some consideration to the supply of the future. Not long ago lumber manufacturers in the Western States held a conference in Portland, Ore., to discuss forest fire protection, conservation, and restoration. Probably fifty per cent. of all the standing timber of the United States is west of the Rocky Mountains but the lumbermen of that region are sensibly taking steps to conserve it. The example should be followed in every State where the timber problem is becoming acute—and that means practically all the States of the Union.

Well Answered.

A fellow wrote to an editor as follows: "Dear Sir:—I have been trying an experiment. I have a field of corn which I plowed on Sunday. I planted it on Sunday. I cultivated it on Sunday. I cut and hauled it to the barn on Sunday. And I find that I have more corn to the acre than has been gathered by any of my neighbors this October." The fellow sent his letter, sure that the editor could give him no answer to the sneer implied in it. But imagine his feelings when in the last issue of the paper, he read his own letter in print and at the end of it this one sentence: "God does not make full settlement in October."

Flying-Men Fall. Victims to stomach, liver and kidney troubles like other people, with like results in loss of appetite, backache, and tired, listless, run-down feeling. There's no need to feel like that as T. D. Peebles, Henry, Tenn., proved. "Six bottles of Electric Bitters," he writes, "did more to give me new strength and good appetite than all other stomach remedies I used." So they help everybody. I fully to suffer when this great remedy will help you from the first dose. Try it. Only 50 cents at all dealers.

An Insubstantial Claim.

An Illinois woman has written to the Clerk of the Fayette County Court asserting a claim to the land on which the city of Lexington is growing and prospering. She says her great grand father was a soldier in the war of 1812 and they paid him off with a land warrant, but he never done anything with it. She asserts that it was "the boundary of the land that Lexington City is built on."

The insubstantial nature of the claim is made manifest by the simple facts of history, since Lexington was permanently settled in 1719 and was incorporated as a town in 1782. It is not even remotely probable that the Federal Government in 1812 or at any other period was attempting to pay its war score by giving patents to town sites and private, improved property. The claim is hardly less absurd, however, than many other such claims in the prosecution of which great numbers of deluded persons have been "throwing good money after bad." Newspaper readers are familiar with the frequently recurring stories of efforts to realize on marvelous estates located in the heart of New York, Baltimore, St. Louis and other large cities. These mythical estates are equaled only in their fabulous wealth by the equally mythical personal fortunes tied up in London or somewhere else and awaiting the discovery of lost, strayed or stolen heirs.

The Illinois woman, in referring to her great grandfather's remarkable land warrant, says "he just let it lay." She will save time and postage stamps by continuing to "let it lay." She may as reasonably hope to acquire a slice of the moon or a section of Mars as to establish ownership by means thereof to all or any part of "Lexington City."

Indian Killed on Track.

Near Rochelle, Ill., an Indian went to sleep on a railroad track and was killed by the fast express. He paid for his carelessness with his life. Often it is that way when people neglect coughs and colds. Don't risk your life when prompt use of Dr. King's New Discovery will cure them and so prevent dangerous throat and lung trouble. "It completely cured me in a short time of a terrible cough that followed a severe attack of Grip," writes J. R. Watts, Floydada, Texas, "and I regained 15 pounds in weight that I had lost." Quick, safe, reliable and guaranteed. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free at all dealers.

We dislike to advertise the worst road condition of some of the roads, and we as carriers do not wish to furnish them. One rural carrier says he has a mud hole three feet deep, a mile long and about knee deep on his route. Within 300 yards is a bank of gravel sufficient to make it good. It takes him about one hour to pull the truck through it, and there are others on the same road as bad but not so long. And other carriers have places fully as bad, though not always so long as the one mentioned above. It is impossible for some of the roads to go in a vehicle, and horseback they have to climb banks on places and a few inches wide, but in most places they must "hit the middle" and pull thru, their horses pulling their feet out. Sometimes leaving the shoe in the bottom. It looks as though it is going to take a discontinuance of a lot of star routes, as well as rural routes, before the people will be to the seriousness of the situation and the absolute necessity of fixing the roads. Glasgow Republican.

A Narrow Escape.
As Wallace and Lillie Rice, who attend the local High School, were leaving for home last evening, one of the shafts on their buggy came loose where it was attached to the axle and dropped, frightening the horses which began running and kicking. Wallace could not control the horse because every time he pulled on the lines the buggy ran against the animal. Just after passing the residence of Mr. E. A. Hall, the horse was pulled off of the road. The buggy turned over and the other shaft was broken off. The horse ran a short piece when it fell, by which Wallace and Lillie were saved from under the buggy, and soon had caught the animal. A pair of shafts was put on the buggy and leaving his sister with friends in Burlington, he drove the horse home without further incident. Those who saw the accident say the children's escape was nothing short of a miracle.

At a sale of mules in Shelby county a pair of premium three year old mules sold for $630, a yearling brought $274. Ten head of brood mares and yearlings sold to $225, and twenty-seven head of coming two year olds averaged $151.40 per head.

It was expected that several men prominent in organized labor who were indicted by the Federal grand jury at Indianapolis for alleged participation in the so-called dynamite conspiracy, would be arrested yesterday.

With clover seed selling around sixteen dollars per bushel and wheat at $1.25 per bushel, it is not surprising that the farmers are getting a good price for their crops.

GROUND-HOG BILL

A Speech That Might Have Been Made in Legislature But Wasn't

A Bill Introduced Making February 2 a Legal Holiday

It was the 3d day of February, many years ago. The Kentucky Legislature was in session. The day had been dragging along wearily. Fulton Pritchett, Representative from county, opened a letter which lay on his desk. It was from his home town. He read the words: "Why don't you do something—why don't you introduce some bill—anything?"

Fulton Pritchett put the letter in his pocket and slowly arose. Turning toward the Speaker's chair he said: "Mr. Speaker, as you are probably aware this is the 3d day of February, known generally as Ground Hog Day, the day on which is determined as to whether there will be six weeks more of winter or moderating to spring. On this day that modest and unassuming denizen of the earth's burrows and recesses, awakes from his hibernation thru the hoary winter months, and emerges upon terra firma, sniffing the wandering breeze and with the eye of a philosophical prognosticator, looks about him. If his glance falls upon his shadow, he returns to his seclusion and for another six weeks' sleep; but in case he does not see his shadow, he turns joyously toward the by-paths of his native land, in search of food, for the winter is over, and sunshine and balmy zephyrs and bursting buds and murmuring brooks will soon make glad the heart of nature."

"This has been a question that has not only agitated the naturalist student, but the general scientific world as well. There have been many doubters, and those who would throw discredit upon this time-honored and unmeasurable event, but close observation and scientific investigation throw the balance of power in favor of the groundhog. It has been clearly demonstrated that nature gives to the animal an instinct to preserve the coming changes of the weather or general conditions of water and wind. The muskrat can be seen removing his effects from his hole out to the banks of a stream just before a big rise. It is a well known fact, sir, that rats will desert a ship, that is fated to sink. When you see a guinea rooting about in a tree, you can look for a hurried weather change. A crowing hen never fails to warn you of a bad luck. When a ground hog totes straw in his mouth, you had better get out the blankets and beat up the feather beds but our domestic hog is outdistanced as a weather prophet by the intellectual barometer by his namesake of the underworld. The hog of ham and sausage, of bacon and lard, has never occupied a very high place, figured by the standard of animal intelligence, but my neighbor, Sid Berk says they've got some characteristics that are worthy of observation."

"I went through Sid's wood-lane last fall and saw about forty hogs running about in a most curious way. Some were darting across the path way, and some were cutting under the bushes, and others running in every direction. I asked what was the matter with his hogs."

"Well, you see," said Sid, "I called them hogs at feedin' time until I lost my voice from hoarseness, and got to beatin' on a hollow tree with a stick for them to come. They come alright, but now the woodpeckers have took it up and down night set my hogs crazy."

"So, gentlemen, I am before you today to defend the ground-hog, to place upon the pinnacle of a more glorious standard the modest merits of his fame, to strive in my humble way to obliterate the stigma placed upon his record by doubting Thomases."

"Picture, gentlemen, a desolate wintry day of the 2d of February, the leafless branches swaying restlessly in the moaning wind; the icy sleet and snow choking the highways and wayside haunts; a picture of the pathos, melancholy that hovers over fallow and field, over dell and hill, and picture this bunch of brown, bristling back ground hogs, as he comes forth into the light to make his unimpeded forecast to trembling humanity. He turns his eyes toward the heavens; carefully he gazes about him; his shadow is before him. Sadly he returns to his den. But picture him again—the skies are bright, but there is no shadow about him. Ah, gentlemen, in that hour the sap of the trees is beginning to mount joyously toward the branches to hasten the green-tinted buds and start the tiny leaves toward a canopy of glorious shade. The tinkling music of the brook will soon gladden the poet's ear and heart; the wild bloom will hang across the pathways in an ecstasy of beauty and delight; the birds will meet where the bursting glory of spring is rich and heavy in splendor, and from their silken throats will come the symphonies of golden melody. Gentlemen, I honor this prophet, the ground-hog, and I move you that we name this bill before this assembly, making this 3d day of February, known as Ground-hog Day, a legal holiday for all time to come. By I hope a second vote the Hon. Fulton Pritchett sat down amid a roar of applause. The motion was lost, but that night the Hon. Fulton Pritchett said: "Angels could do no more."—By Jas. Tandy. Contagious Diseases.

Lawrenceburg, Ind., Feb. 16.—Smallpox, scarlet fever and diphtheria are epidemic here, and 39 cases are under quarantine. The Board of Health is using every precaution to prevent the spread of these diseases. The moving picture theaters have been ordered to close at 10 o'clock, and several of the primary grades in the public schools have been dismissed. The Board of Health has ordered each scholar in the public schools to be vaccinated.

TOMBSTONE CUT

And Coffin is Nearly Done, So Thomas Will Dig His Own Grave When Frost Goes.

Frederick, Md., Feb. 13.—With his casket nearly completed and his tombstone, carved by his own hand, ready to be set in place, Howard S. Thomas, a stone-cutter of Libertytown, Md., is making all preparations for his funeral, which he hopes—and has ground for believing—will be deferred many years.

Altho in good health, Thomas is methodically and carefully completing every detail for his funeral, and within a few days the coffin will be exhibited in the store window of Libertytown's barber-cabinet maker, Mr. Crum, who expects to send home the last nail within a few days.

All that remains to be done is to dig the grave, and Thomas says he will start that work also with the frost is out of the ground. Thomas has made hundreds of tombstones, and on all of them he has carved hands pointing upward, and with the index finger he has carved a hand pointing downward, which means, he says, that his soul has reached an unfortunate destination, but this "more so" he returned once more to Mother Earth. The only words on the stone are "H. S. Thomas—1860-19—Returned to Mother Earth." The coffin is his own design, and when completed will be rather unique. It is rather plain, without ornaments or trimmings, and the only thing on the interior will be a pillow. Instead of a silver plate, a marble slab will be placed on the top of the coffin and his name carved thereon. The wood is wild cherry, which Mr. Thomas bought eight years ago.

Danger in Frozen Silage.

Farmers of Wisconsin are being warned against the danger of feeding silage that may be beneficial to many of our readers. J. L. Torney of the College of Agriculture of that state is sending out the warning against the use of frozen silage. The unusually cold weather this winter has frozen silage in many silos and in some cases considerable trouble has followed when this feed has been given to the stock. Sheep usually fall victims to frozen silage more readily than cattle. One man lost over half a ton of sheep in one night from this cause.

"No bad results occur when the silage is fed after being thawed," says Mr. Torney. "It must be remembered, however, that after thawing, the silage will mold readily and so must be fed almost immediately. During cold weather it is wise to keep the silage in the silo in a somewhat lower than the center. A good way to thaw out the frozen material is to cover it with silage that is not frozen. Some cover the silage in the silo with a blanket. Another way to thaw it is to fill the silage cart and let it stand in a warm place over night. Some people hang a lighted lantern in the silo to keep the frost out."

Lawrenceburg Items.

The Harlan brothers, who reside across the river, have a circle of friends in Lawrenceburg to William Scheibler, a stone contractor, of Covington, Ky. It is supposed that the stone are to be used in the construction of the Government dam to be built at Rising Sun. Our young friend, Holman Wingate, known among his friends as "Judge," who has been in the city for some time, has been transferred to Greensburg, where he becomes head bill clerk of a large firm. His long circle of friends in Lawrenceburg while pleased with his preference for his leaving, Lawrenceburg Register.

Albert Conner received considerable tobacco the past week, it being in condition to handle and the growers who reside on the river are anxious to get their crops off of hand before the mud gets too deep for travel.

BLUFORD W. ADAMS

Another Ex-Confederate Soldier Passes to the Great Beyond.

Was a Member of Gen. John H. Morgan's Command.

Served as County Clerk of Boone County Fourteen Years.

The remains were conveyed to Big Bone church on the 14th inst., by undertaker John Allison, of Covington, where a very large concourse of friends and relatives assembled to pay their last and sad tribute of respect to the departed loved one. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. A. L. Stith, pastor of Gunpowder Baptist church of which the deceased had been an influential and earnest member for many years. Rev. McMillan, the pastor of Big Bone church assisted in the services.

At the close of the funeral services and after the friends took a last look at the remains, they were conveyed to their final resting place in the family lot in the cemetery of the church, and thus closed the life of one of the county's most influential and worthy citizens, but he will long be remembered.

Born February 3, 1845. Married February 9, 1874. Died February 12, 1912. The floral offerings were numerous and of the most beautiful designs.

CARD OF THANKS—I take this means of expressing my heartfelt gratitude to the numerous friends who were so untiring and made so many sacrifices to minister to my husband, Bluford W. Adams, during his illness, and also to thank them for the assistance rendered me throughout his sickness.

Fannie Adams.

A Kentucky Problem.

It is a question with some which is the safer and cheaper, a mule or an automobile. The mule must have corn, hay, oats or grass. He may in the meantime be back-jumping and lacerating you in the middle of a mud hole or on top of a pile of rocks. The automobile eats nothing but gasoline and when at rest it is a nuisance. But when it gets to running it goes at it blind and is liable to want to climb a telephone pole or jump off a bridge. Mules and automobiles are really both dangerous. Therefore we walk.—Madisonville Hustler.

LONG CAREER ENDED.

William Adams, Aged Eighty-Six Years Dies at His Home in Erlanger.

William Adams, died at his home in Erlanger, last Sunday afternoon. He would have been 78 years old some time next May. Mr. Adams was a native of this county, he spent nearly his entire life here. He was born in Union precinct, near where J. L. Frazier resides. His wife, who survives, was Miss Frances Delph, a daughter of the late Samuel Delph, who resided on the farm near Burlington and now owned by W. P. Sullivan. Their only children who survive are Dr. James L. Adams, of Covington, and Miss Samuel M. Adams, both of whom were at the bedside of their father in his last illness. Mr. Adams had a long and useful life, and was held in the highest esteem by those who knew him, and was ready to go when his time came.

Mr. Adams had long been a member of the Baptist church, and the Union Masonic Lodge, and after the services conducted by Rev. Reed, at Erlanger Baptist church, the Masons took charge and performed their service.

The remains, in charge of Undertaker John Allison, of Covington, were brought to the Odd Fellows' cemetery just east of Burlington, last Tuesday, where they were interred in the family lot in the presence of a large concourse of friends and relatives.

The local mail carriers have been leaving the postoffice at 7 a. m. since the 17th inst., their schedule having been changed to that hour. They are due to arrive at 1 p. m. The present schedule will remain in force until April 1st if not longer. The hour of departure is too early for those who are taking morning dailies published in Cincinnati, and will require the reader to get a hustle on in order to supply the three Burlington rural routes on the day of publication.

The Boone Literary Society will meet at Library Hall Feb. 23. All members are requested to be present. Business of importance on hand.

POTATOES FROM EUROPE

Coming to This Country to Supply The Deficiency.

Foreign Farmers Beat Ours in Yield Per Acre—Predicted Prices Will Go to $2.

New York, Feb. 18.—The steamship Minnetonka came yesterday with 67,556 sacks of potatoes. By the end of the season, according to one importer, there will be arrivals of about 1,000,000 sacks.

Importers say that the farmer may receive as high as $2.00 per bushel for his potatoes this year. Ordinary prices average 35 cents. They maintain that the home supply is willfully scant, because the American farmers' plant in foolish ways, and that foreign relief is prevented on account of the duty.

Prices are consistent with this decreased supply of course; January, 1912, as against January 1911 per bushel: 30 cents to 37 cents in Maine, 91 cents to 47 cents in New York, 98 cents to 57 cents in Virginia, and $1.08 to 64 cents in Massachusetts.

"The individual has a harder time getting a potato in open market than he used to have, not so much because there are more people," said W. N. White, a representative importer, "but because the farmers plant their potatoes three feet from row to row, and 18 inches set to set, whereas in England and other parts of Europe they set the 36 inches row to row and 12 inches set to set. Planted thus closely, the land is shaded, the weeds from growing, and the moisture retained goes to make the crop."

"England this year will average 250 bushels to the acre. Ireland 230 bushels, or three times America's average of 80 bushels per acre. Moreover, the American farmers received good prices all through the autumn and sold the bulk of their crops fast. The dug, with the result that on the first of January 1912, compared to 1911, there was a deficiency in the country of over 80,000,000 bushels of potatoes. This was well known to some dealers, and a few of the rich farmers in Maine, New York, Michigan and Wisconsin held their potatoes and the talk is going around that states that potatoes will finish at $2 per bushel."

Washington's Fortune.

Whether Washington can be put in the end category of millionaires is a question that is being asked. According to the late Paty Custis, Ford, whose work "The True George Washington," is a recent publication, "the Father of His Country," when he died was worth $350,000. This fortune did not include his wife's property, but nevertheless it made him one of the wealthiest Americans of his time. Ford adds: "And it is to be questioned if a fortune was ever more honestly acquired or more thoroughly deserved."

John Adams, however, probably would have differed with Ford on this point, had the two ever come together. In one of his recurrent moods of bitterness and jealousy toward Washington Adams asked: "Would Washington have ever been commander of the Revolutionary Army or President of the United States if he had not married the rich widow of Mr. Custis?"

According to Mr. Ford, it seems that he would for he had achieved colonial military fame before his marriage. That the Widow Custis was a desirable "partie" is not to be denied, however as her part of the Custis property equalled fifteen thousand acres of land, a good part of it adjoining the city of Williamsburg; several lots in the said city; between two and three hundred negroes, and about eight or ten thousand pounds upon bond, estimated at the time at about twenty thousand and pounds in all. This property was further increased on the death of Paty Custis in 1773 by a half of her fortune, which added ten thousand pounds to the sum.

An Epidemic of Coughing is sweeping over the town. Old and young alike are affected, and the strain is particularly hard on little children and on elderly people. Foley's Honey and Tar Compound is a quick safe and reliable cure for all coughs and colds. Contains no opiates. For sale at Jones' drug store, Walton, Ky.

Yesterday and last night were sure ground-hog winter, of which there are two weeks more to come. J. M. Parlow, of Pleasant Valley neighborhood, was a pleasant caller at this office Tuesday.

A large crowd attended W. E. Poulson's sale last Monday, and good prices prevailed.

Washington's Political Decalogue.

Washington's Farewell Address has stood like a proclamation of an inspired prophet of God. It is faintly stating the truth to declare that contain the ten Political Commandments that should govern our national life. Every political disaster of the past, every evil of today, every peril of the future finds its perfect remedy in this marvelous address. A brief summary may be made as follows:

Thou shalt preserve the Union. Thou shalt observe the Constitution. Thou shalt obey the law. Thou shalt deal justly with all nations.

Thou shalt regard morality and religion as essential to political prosperity.

Thou shalt not permit one branch of the Government to encroach upon another. Thou shalt not suffer usurpation by those in authority.

Thou shalt not entangle America in any foreign alliance.

If Washington's modesty had not prevented reference to his own example and experience he might have added two other commandments:

Thou shalt not elect the Chief magistrate to a third term.

Thou shalt not permit thy servants with the serpent's tongue of malice and slander.—Jay B. Hamilton.

TOBACCO SALES.

Lexington, Feb. 18.—The sales of loose leaf Burley tobacco on the Lexington market last week aggregated 3,258,155 pounds which brought an average of $11.51. This was the highest week's average of the season and was 12 cents above the average of the previous week. The average of last week, being the highest of the season, is especially remarkable in view of the fact that the market has been overwhelmed with receipts of American tobacco, there being at no time room in the warehouses for all the tobacco which came in.

President Clarence LeBus and other officials of the Burley Tobacco Society returned today from Bracken county, where a meeting was held at Brooksville yesterday in the interest of the ten-year pool. Thirty-five tobacco growers signed the pooling pledge, their signatures pledging 5,246 acres. One of the signers was Mrs. Mary S. McDowell, who pledged 129 acres, and was the first woman to enter the ten-year pool.

Maysville, Feb. 18.—The past week on the floors of the farmers and planters' warehouses was the best they have experienced since the opening of the season insofar as prices are concerned. All grades showed an advance and fancy tobaccos had no limit, one basket bringing $51 Rhodes & Faris, of Elkview, topped the market for the week with a crop that averaged $23.45.

Carlisle, Feb. 18.—The past week has broken all local records as to prices and quantity of tobacco. The week's sales were 300,000 pounds, with the best prices for select grades running from $30 to $42 per hundred pounds.

Lexington, Feb. 20.—The chairman of each county board a call for a meeting to be held in each county seat February 28, the last day of the year, at which will be received for the ten-year pool.

Cynthiana, Feb. 20.—The offerings at the Farmers' Loose Leaf Tobacco market in this place were a large portion brought from 10 to 40 cents. One basket brought $40.

Richmond, Feb. 20.—Today's market was above 200,000 lbs., with prices from $5 to $50.

ELECTRIC RAILROAD.

No Money to Be Paid Until Road Is in Operation.

Messrs. Bean and Snyder, of Cincinnati, have been here a couple of days and are in the interest of the Covington, Big Bone and Carrollton electric and steam railroad, and expect to stay until they get the required substantial encouragement.

In company with Capt. G. W. Anderson they have worked two days and gotten many substantial subscriptions to the preferred stock, and have not met with a single turnout, which speaks well for our progressive people.

They do not ask for a cent until the road is open, and here to Ghent, at which time 50 per cent is due, and when Warsaw is operating over the line the full amount is payable.

With the line through to Covington, what a great benefit will be derived to Carrollton, Ghent and Warsaw, and to everybody residing in that or near the line of the proposed road.—Carrollton News.

QUEEREST PRISON IN WORLD

Arizona Jail Is Blasted Out of a Mountain of Solid Quartz Rock.

When the authorities of Graham county, Arizona, decided to look about for a place in which to confine criminals, they found a natural depression in the side of a hill. This was enlarged into what might be called an artificial cave, divided into four compartments. The cave was excavated parallel to the side of the mountain in which it was made, and daylight admitted by holes blown out of the wall with explosives, the windows being guarded by a network of heavy steel bars. The entrance to the depression was also closed in the same manner, and a vestibule or porch of masonry built out from it to provide quarters for the sheriff and his assistants. This vestibule is also divided into compartments, which are connected by gates of steel bars. The only way of entering the prison is through the vestibule of masonry, and in order to escape the inmates would have to cut their way through three sets of bars which are an inch in thickness, as the windows are so high up above the rock forming the floor of the cells that they could not reach them. It is necessary, however, to have a very secure place, as the criminals in this part of the country are of a most desperate class, and the inmates frequently include murderers and highwaymen. The mountain which has thus been turned into a prison is composed of solid quartz rock, and the excavation was made principally by the use of explosives. The jail is located in the town of Clifton, the county seat.—Wide World Magazine.

MORALITY OF THE ELEPHANT

He Makes a Cat's Paw of Boy's Hand to Steal the Unhusked Rice.

Singular as it may seem, elephants which have associated with man, entertain the notion that, under special circumstances, they are not responsible if they utilize another to commit an illegal act. The following is an instance of this elephantine morality:

A man in Hangoon bought three young elephants to send to England. They were tame and playful, but cunning. Knowing that it was wrong to steal paddy (unhusked rice)—the idea had doubtless been impressed upon them by punishment for stealing—they would not touch it themselves. But if a boy went to see them, he would be seized by one, the little trunk would be coiled around his arm, and he would be led to where the paddy was kept in bags.

The elephant would make a cat's paw of the boy's hand to take up a handful of paddy. Then, letting go, he would turn up the end of his trunk, open it, and coaxingly invite the boy to drop in the paddy.

Should the boy, however, put it back in the bag, his arm would again be seized by the trunk, and his hand would be again inserted into the paddy bag.

The boy, anxious to be released, would usually drop the paddy into the trunk, and the elephant would immediately put the rice into his mouth. After repeating the operation several times, the elephant would scamper off, feeling that he had got the paddy without stealing it.—Harper's Weekly.

Staining Glass.
The art of colored glass has been lost and refound; guarded and stolen so many times during the history of civilization that it seems almost impossible to say anything new on glass staining. Yet a process has been discovered for making the stained glass covered in windows which is a departure from anything known to the old timers.

The glass first receives its design in mineral colors, and the whole is then fired in a heat so intense that the coloring matter and the glass are indissolubly fused. The most attractive feature of this method is that the surface acquires a peculiar pitted character in the heat, so that when the glass is in place the lights are beautifully soft and mellow.

Swimmers the Prey of Eels.
A remarkable story of the seizure of swimmers by eels comes from New Zealand. A stream in New Zealand was a favorite bathing place, because the current was swift and strong. Time after time the bathers would be seen to shriek and splash on the surface, would disappear before help could reach him, and when his body had been found it had invariably been eaten by eels. The cause of the fatality remained unexplained in mystery for a long time, but at length the true cause was discovered that whilst the swimmer was almost stationary in the rapid stream a huge eel would seize him by the foot or leg and drag him down beneath the surface.

Knew It Was an Idle Threat.
"Then," he cried tragically, "then you reject me? And for my hated rival?"

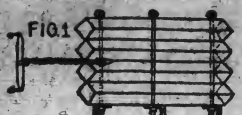

"Yes," she answered, coldly, but colloquially. "Yes to both questions."

"Hal! Then I owe the fellow a grudge. I have long owed him $10. And now I will pay both debts at once and he will fall dead!"

PREPARATION OF A SEED BED

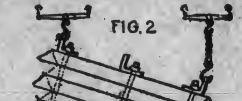

Illustration Shows Implement for Mowing Surface and Also for Smoothing Roads.

An implement which may be used to mellow the surface is made by taking four pieces of seasoned hard wood, each six by six inches, and eight feet long; bolt together so that the corners, or edges, will rest on the ground, with three eye-bolts of three-quarter-inch round iron, about 33 inches long, one through the middle of the drag, the others each six inches from either end of the timbers. Use angle washers with holes for open rings of hooks, clip out half-inch edge of the tow inside piece back of end bolt, for chain hook in transportation from place to place, as shown in Fig. 1.

For use as road smoother, drop back right-hand end of drag with about 2 1/2 feet of wagon stay-chain, as in Fig. 2. After plowing in the earlier portion of the day, transfer the teams to the combination drag-harrow, guiding the six abreast with ordinary checks as shown in Fig. 3.

Caution on Pasturing Alfalfa.
Alfalfa should be pastured with very great caution. In fact, the farmer who holds this matchless crop in proper regard will pasture something else and just use the alfalfa for hay. But if the alfalfa is to be pastured about half enough stock should be kept on it to keep the growth down. By this method two or three cuttings of hay will be obtained in addition to the pasturage.

Another caution to throw out is that it should be allowed to make a good start in the spring before the stock are turned on, and should be allowed to go in the winter with a good cover. Under no conditions should it be pastured in cold weather.

Buying Supplementary Feeds.
The farmer who has an abundance of corn and no other grain will find it greatly to his profit if he will sell a part of his corn and buy other feeds to furnish a variety of rations for the animals, as their systems thus would be supplied with all the essentials necessary to proper growth and development, and yet not require so much feed.

Good Roads & Farm Notes

A liberal use of paint means a great deal to the farmer.

Sharpen and repair the garden tools for next season's use.

The successful garden is started in the fall, although not a seed may be planted.

Keep all the tools that are used around the barn in convenient and safe places.

A little paint goes a long way toward making a home out of a group of buildings.

How much does it cost to have that machinery shining out in the weather? Shodding is cheap.

While planting your garden give due attention to the color of the flowers so that they may harmonize.

Many a new and valuable implement is left out all winter more through carelessness than anything else.

Tobacco dust worked into the surface of the soil just before setting the lettuce will help to keep the aphids away.

These days can be put to good use in getting the grindstone into service and sharpening up things generally.

Ashes are best applied in the spring, separately or in connection with phosphate fertilizers as a top dressing.

Cabbage is one of the easiest vegetables to start from seed, and to transplant, and to be sown to grow in the garden or field.

Do you know that more real danger lurks in a common cold than in anything of the minor ailments? The safe way is to take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, a thoroughly reliable preparation and rid yourself of the old cold as quickly as possible. This remedy is for sale by all dealers.

In the file of the Recorder we read quite an interesting sketch in regard to seed corn. From experience I have learned that by gathering your seed corn as soon as it is pure bred and true to the variety, there will be no trouble about it germinating. For several years, I have made a practice of going thru my corn field and selecting such ears as are pure bred and true to the variety. I take the shock off all but enough to tie. I tie ears together and hang let it remain there until I get ready to plant. Since adopting this plan I have never had a bad germ of corn on account of bad seed corn. I also consider the location of the ear in the shock. I prefer to have the ear about three to three and one half feet from the ground. I also find it a good policy to have some old corn left over in case the new crop is not likely to germinate, we have the old to fall back on and corn properly cared for will germinate when four years old. After testing the seed and finding it is not good I still have the problem unsolved. If the same conditions are general, the only way to solve the problem is to gather your seed early and care for it properly and you can rest assured that your seed will germinate all right; also by careful selection of your seed you improve your corn greatly. You cannot spend a day, more profitably at anything, than going through your field at proper time and gather your seed corn.

The Ideal Fireless Cook Stove

An automatic maid that never grows tired or careless—never burns the food, never wants a day out, never leaves you, demands no wages—that relieves you of more than half your kitchen work, saves four-fifths of your fuel bill and cooks the most delicious meals you ever tasted.

Roasts, Bakes, Steams, Stews, Fries, Boils

Takes the drudgery out of the kitchen work. Makes the food more wholesome and delicious. Saves four-fifths of the fuel bill. No other Fireless Cooker in the world is so substantially built, so handsome in appearance, so thoroughly efficient in operation as the ideal.

No other Fireless Cooker has or can have our Patented Water Seal. Read its description carefully.

The Ideal has a "Water Seal" Top. No other cooker has a Water Seal Top. The steam from the cooker condenses and fills the Water Seal, thus locking the cooker at an absolute cooking point. The cooking heat cannot escape. It is held there, to the full period of the cooking time. Thus the Ideal cooks faster, cooks better and keeps the food hot longer than any other Fireless Cooker. No number of tops nor their shape can do the work equal to the Water Seal in our cooker.

Aluminum-Lined, Water-Sealed Top. Perfectly Insulated, Beautifully Finished. No other Fireless like it. Carefully built inside.

The cooker is more carefully built up on the inside by necessary reinforcements than you will find in any other cooker—those invisible necessities are all in the Ideal—finishing touches that are necessary, but not to be found in other cookers. It will do everything we claim for it. The IDEAL is not a Luxury; it is a Necessity, because ITS USE IS AN ECONOMY.

Two more public sales advertised in this issue. Look them up and see if either of them is that of your neighbor.

"They come higher every year, but we must have them," said the lady. Wonder what she was referring to, eggs or skirts.

With the appearance of both robins and snakes, also boys with marbles who can doubt that there will be an early spring?

The past few months has not been hard on land as there have been no heavy rains, the weathering productive of snow most often.

The Grown-Ups Day is intended especially for the farmers and their wives, although others are welcome. The farmers are urged to come.

For several days past it has been almost impossible to use teams and wagons on the farms on account of the ground being so soft following the thaw.

J. M. Eddins has ordered a nice comfortable passenger wagon built, which he will have ready for use, when he takes charge of the mail route, the first of July.

February came in on Thursday this year and goes out on Thursday, consequently it had five Thursdays, hence you get five copies of the Recorder this month.

County Clerk W. R. Rogers spent several days the past week on his farm near Walton. He came home last Sunday looking as though he had been taking considerable exercise while gone.

Capt. Marcus Collins, of Wynne, Arkansas, and his friend, Mr. A. T. Davis, of Prescott, Arizona, spent a couple of days in Burlington, this week, selling stock in the Northern Gold mine.

The mine is now in operation and assayers pronounce the ore as rich. Mr. Collins is well known here and said he believed a certain old friend to sell the stock because he is acquainted with its output and is satisfied it is many times better than they represent it.

H. J. Marshall, of Aurora, visited the mine a few weeks since and is enthusiastic over the prospect. He and his father are heavy investors.

About 11:30 a. m. yesterday it got nearly as dark as night, and several heard distant thunder.

Thomas Summers, administrator of the estate of Mary Ellen Snyder, was in Burlington, Monday, and placed an advertisement of the sale of her personal property.

Some say the fruit crop is alright. The severe cold weather is supposed to have put the buds back so far that they will not swell in time to be injured by cold weather yet to come.

It is hoped that the blackberry bush will come around in due time with an abundant crop. A distinguished farmer in the Idlewild neighborhood says most any farmer can raise blackberries enough to do him, although he has known some who failed.

The stock men and feeders in Montgomery and adjoining counties are facing the hardest problem in years. The two months of straight cold weather has caused a widespread suffering among the stock and the mortality among young lambs has been frightful.

Here is a message of hope and good cheer from Mrs. C. J. Martin, Boone Mill, Va., who is the mother of eighteen children. Mrs. Martin's stock has been in trouble and constipation by Chamberlain's Tablets after five years of suffering, and now recommends the tablets to the public. Sold by all dealers.

The Boone County High School is trying to make itself a power for progress in the county's best interests. Help to hasten the coming of its greater usefulness by attending Grown-Ups Day, Feb. 28. If the people of the county show a great interest on that day, the State may put an Experiment Station here.

The best members of the General Assembly are those who do but little in the way of introducing bills, and the member who makes the greatest noise is not the one who accomplishes the most as a general rule. The lawmaker who has a speech to deliver over time an opportunity is presented soon becomes a bore to the listening element of the body.

There is an effort on foot to establish an experiment station in connection with the County High School in Burlington. It is certainly hoped that the effort will be successful, as the success of the experiments would be assured at least as long as Prof. Dix is in charge of the school, as he is thoroughly prepared for that class of work as well as for any pertaining to the school.

There is little doubt but that the present system of taxation in vogue in our State has retarded the State's progress to a degree that is alarming to contemplate. May the day be hastened when this shall be remedied—Bowling Green Times-Journal.

There is a good demand for Shorthorns, particularly bulls in which is a good evidence that western farmers are going to get busy and do their share towards helping to feed the increasing beef eaters of our country. We believe a certain harvest awaits the men who are far sighted enough to go more into cattle breeding.

HEM HIM AND LOVED HIM

Dr. Courtenay, Mutilated Veteran of the Confederate Army, as He Was in Tiptah.

Dr. Courtenay entered the Confederate army as a surgeon, and after the surrender found himself without home, family, or fortune. His right arm, however, was not empty; the hand that had saved so many lives could not save itself. It had been amputated after Gettysburg, and the story goes that Lee himself—the name is always pronounced slowly and reverently in Tiptah—had said, "I wish I could give my hand to save yours, doctor." Another loss, equally grave, but less conspicuous, was that of his left leg. It was this trouble that had brought him to Tiptah's mild climate, for nearly 20 years he had lived there alone in his three-room cottage, riding out every day to his little farm, five miles from town, and reading and smoking far into the night. His library was the wonder of Tiptah. Books in five languages lined the walls of his house—all in the cheapest bindings, for the doctor was poor; but, as he used to say, it was the meat in the nut he cared for, not the shell outside. He never practiced medicine, except occasionally among persons too poor to pay for medical advice, or, more frequently, in serious cases when called in consultation. It was known that he had never taken a fee in Tiptah. Every one believed implicitly in his skill. It was a common thing to hear him say, after a death, "Nothing could have saved him; Dr. Courtenay said so."—Lillian Kirk Hammond in the Atlantic.

THREE BUILDERS OF NATIONS

Cavour, William the Silent and George Washington Never Yielded to Despotism Ideals.

As a nation-maker Cavour stands with William the Silent and George Washington. Each of these men fought through the agony of a war of liberation, yet never yielded for a moment to the military or despotic ideals so liable to be bred in time of crisis; each loved free institutions with his whole heart; each could have said as truly as William the Silent, "I was always on the side of the people;" yet each avoided the special faults of the demagogue as completely as Wellington or Peel; each played the justice and mercy amid the chaos of wrath and revolution; each kept an heroic equanimity of temper toward all their supporters, even toward the foolish and the false who bade fair to ruin their work; finally, each died leaving as his handiwork a nation whose every merit is symbolized in the life of the man who made it, whose every defect is due to the tradition which he started being too lofty for imitation. If Americans can boast that America is more true to the traditions of Washington than Italy is true to the traditions of Cavour, they may be sure that their country is reaping the benefit in due proportion. Measures and policies and constitutions must change with changing time, but the spirit that inspires a just policy is the same in the eighteenth, the nineteenth, and the twentieth centuries.—George Macaulay Trevelyan, in the Atlantic.

Special House for "High Brown" Apes. The "high brown" apes in the New York Zoological park are to have a house to themselves in the near future. The board of estimate and apportionment will soon be asked for an appropriation necessary to cover the expenses for such a structure. At present the crude chimpanzees and orangutans are in the house with their less intelligent sisters and brothers.

The intelligent specimens now number four chimpanzees and five orangutans. Baldy is the leader of the social class, and Bessie, recently sold to the society by Professor Garner, is another inmate who stands alone. The proposed structure is necessary to the continued health of the valuable specimens, as well as to give proper facilities for their exhibition to the public.

Yellow Jackets Held Steeply. A contractor and three carpenters were painfully stung when they climbed to the top of the First Baptist church, in New Castle, Del., recently, to make repairs to the roof. Thousands of yellow jackets had made their home in the belfry, and they resented the intrusion and drove the men to the ground. One of the men made his way to the belfry and with his paper closed all exits by which the insects could escape. Then he placed the sulphur candles out to burn, and lighted them. After the candles had burned out enough dead insects were found to fill a peach basket to overflowing, and the carpenters then resumed work on the church roof.

The Old-Time Barber. Old-time barbers had to display more variety than their successors. A work published in 1892 describes a barber's greeting to a customer: "Sir, will you have your hair cut in the Italian manner, short and round, and then braided with the curling iron to make it look like a half moon in a mist, or, like a Spangard, long at the ears and curled like the two ends of an old porcupine, or will you be Frenchified with a forelock down to your shoulders, or, if you prefer it, have it cut in the modern style, or, if you wish, I will execute your work."

The Activity in Burley Tobacco.

Reports of good prices at the local warehouse in the Burley tobacco district and the information of the sale of more than 5,000,000 pounds by the Burley Society should be encouraging to the growers of that region. Doubtless the better conditions are having an inspiring effect, as it is announced from various localities that active preparations are being made for putting out the 1912 crop. The Burley Society is pushing its ten-year pooling plan throughout the Burley district with success in some counties and rather indifferent results in others. Whether the plan shall meet the approval of the majority of the growers or not it seems certain that the men who are raising Burley tobacco in that section will ultimately unite on some sort of pooling agreement whereby they can protect themselves from the possibility of prices that are plain cases of prostration. "This is being done successfully in the dark tobacco districts and elsewhere and will be done everywhere unless it should appear that the dissolution of the Tobacco Trust has had the effect of restoring competitive bidding. There are those who express the belief that this competition has already been restored and will no more disappear from the face of the earth as it did in those agonizing times which preceded the "tobacco troubles." Probably the average grower will want to see additional proof before adopting this optimistic view of the situation. Whatever may be the cause of the resumption of activity in Burley and the numerous reports of broken price records, there will be general gratification at the improved outlook for the grower.—C. J.

Grace Ruffles.

Ruffles have come into fashion again. Slender women and young girls will welcome these dainty trimmings for their evening dresses. Some of the newest frocks from Paris have a narrow ruffle around the bottom of the skirt. Many show the same mode of adornment on bodices. A pretty model for a debutante, especially if she be a slender slip of a girl, is a frock of figured net made up of a slip of satin in a delicate shade. Narrow ruffles are being applied to the new gowns in many different ways. The surplice effect is obtained sometimes with a broad piece of embroidery laid on over the shoulders and edged with a narrow ruffle of lace or hemstitched batiste or handkerchief linen. Ruffles of embroidery or lace sailor collars, cuffs and the broad brim of lingerie hats.

Items of Interest.

From all over Louisiana come reports of increased acreage in strawberries.

The freeze of last week killed the beans, tomatoes and most of the radishes in a large part of Texas.

Some beekeepers make it a practice to enlarge the openings of the hives during February, but this is a mistake, as it is often just cold, not colder, during February as during January.

The winter will soon be over, and next month will be a busy one for the bee-keeper, especially the one who winters his bees in the cellar, for March is the month when they are usually set out.

Great quantities of potatoes are being imported from Europe, in large part from Great Britain, where large yields per acre, enable the growers to reap a fair profit at a selling price of twenty-five cents a bushel.

Poultry and eggs are produced in all sections of the country. It is a noticeable fact, however, that the bulk of these important products is produced on the farms of the Mississippi valley, although the production of poultry and eggs constitutes merely a by-product of the general farm.

Potatoes have been selling at such remunerative prices during the recent months that the acreage devoted to this crop will doubtless be fully maintained. If not increased in 1912. All things considered, where potatoes are intelligently grown they are among the greatest profit producers on the farm.

A Warning Against Wet Beds.

Wet and chilled feet usually affect the mucus membrane of the nose, throat and lungs, and la grippe, bronchitis or pneumonia may result. Watch carefully, particularly the children, and for the racking stubborn coughs give Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. It soothes the inflamed membranes, and heals the cough quickly. Take no substitute. For sale at Jones' drug store, Walton, Ky.

The Dynamite Indictment.

Dynamite as baggage is likely now to go out of fashion—Indianapolis Star.

It might be said that the dynamite case is proceeding like clockwork.—Detroit News.

The Department of Justice appears to be doing everything possible to erase bomb throwing from the list of popular outdoor sports.—Kansas City Times.

Justly or otherwise, public confidence has been profoundly shaken, and the honest and law-abiding among the unionists will unfortunately suffer with the guilty.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Our tribunals of justice are impartial. The McNamara proved that, if proof were necessary. Let the prisoners be dealt with by the law. It is their plain duty to redeem itself.—Detroit Free Press.

Labor has made its mistake, as has capital, but it does not believe in dynamite and nitroglycerin as agents of social reform. It is not likely that there will be any more such crimes as those of which the McNamara were convicted. We have made a good deal of progress in the last year.—Indianapolis News.

The American workman who has the education and skill to become an adept in his trade, whether he belong to a labor union or not, is naturally a property wrecker and an assailant of his fellow-man. Under natural and normal conditions, he is a home builder, a home maker and a good citizen, not an enemy of property, of life or of society.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

That, notwithstanding the most searching investigation, the indictments should be limited to this one organization directly connected with the men who have confessed their part in the crime must be taken as removing any shadow of suspicion even by the most unfriendly of connivance or sympathy with such atrocious methods by labor unions at large.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

These arrests, in all parts of the country, show that when Gen. Harrison Gray Otis, in Los Angeles, following the blowing up of his newspaper, the Times, started on the trail of these dynamiters and apprehended the McNamara only the first step was taken. Candor compels one to say that thus far every promise made by those who have been engaged in this case has been kept.—New York Herald.

What the people of this country are interested in finding out is whether a few men committed these crimes on their own initiative and contrary to the wishes of the members of the unions, or whether they were carrying out the tacit instructions of the majority of these members. It promises to be one of the most important cases that has ever been tried in the courts of this country.—New York Commercial.

Every man is innocent until he is proved guilty, and this is a case which the public must be reluctant to prejudice. But those 102 dynamiters, spread over a period of six years, make it impossible for any just person to look upon the arrests of an attempted persecution of organized labor. It would be well for the friends of the arrested men not to raise that cry at present. There will be time enough for that if, after fair trial, the evidence is found to be insufficient to convict and the bulk of the indictments are quashed. The persecution plan was overworked in the McNamara case.—Buffalo Express.

ARE THEY AFRAID?

There are, in this neighborhood agents for several "bucket bowl" cream separators. The kind with wide mouth bowls, full of parts, set on top of their spindles. These agents say, to the farmers intending to buy a separator. "Look out for the Tubular," or "Don't try the Tubular," or "Beware of the Tubular." To hear them talk you would guess right away that is the best cream separator made, and that these "bucket bowl" fellows are afraid of it. And they are afraid of it. The Tubular surpasses every other separator in every particular, and you should take mighty good care you do see a Tubular before you buy a separator. We will be pleased to show you the latest Tubular and give you an illustrated catalog.

MAKING IMPROVED NEST-BOX

Weight of Hen Causes Platform to Tilt, Thereby Closing Door—Size Should Vary.

The size of the nest should vary according to the breed, writes Fred L. Bailey in the Farm and Fireside. For the Atlantic breeds it should be not less than 1 1/2 feet long, 15 inches wide and 20 inches deep. The hen enters the nest by walking in on the platform. Her weight causes the platform to tilt, which, by means of the lever attached, closes the door. When the hen leaves the nest, she goes for the light which comes in at the slit door. Her weight on the front end of the platform causes the door to open, and it stays open until she finds food and water and is ready to go back on the nest. The box is best with no floor, so the nest can be made directly on the ground.

Explanation: A, platform, 1 1/2 feet long by which hen enters nest. B, long board across back end of platform, on which she puts full weight when entering nest, causing platform to tilt. C, lever attached to platform and door, showing door open. D, point where lever is attached to door. E, point where lever is attached to platform. F, board attached to under side of front end of platform, causing platform to stop on a level when door opens, and helping to balance platform. G, cleats with notches in upper ends for axes of platform to rest in. Notches are 8 inches from the bottom of the box. H, partition board between nest and platform. I, J, cover.

THOUGHTS OF SPRING FEEDS

Birds Should Have Variety, Especially Great Deal Reasonably Rich in Protein—Lime Is Needed.

Apoplexy among fowls is generally confined to the overfat birds and generally the heavier breeds are subject to it. It is, therefore, necessary that the keeper does not feed any great quantity of fattening feeds to his birds, especially to the heavier breeds. In the spring of the year the birds should have a variety of feeds, and especially a great deal of feed reasonably rich in protein should be included in the ration.

Soft-shelled eggs are usually produced in considerable numbers at this time of the year. The reason for this generally lies in the fact that the birds do not get the proper feed. To form an egg shell the proper materials must be present, and if they are not present the soft-shelled egg is the result. Lime is one of the necessary materials needed in the formation of an egg shell, and at this time of the year, when the hens are beginning to lay, a liberal amount of lime should be present at all times where they can get it when they desire. In providing any kind of feed—whether it be vegetable or animal feed, be sure that it is pure and wholesome. Musty grains and rotten meats will cause sickness many times when the stock is in perfect health.

Guinea as Watchdog. A good point about guinea is that they make a good "watch dog." Every person who writes of these fowls mentions this point, but a good thing will bear repeating, in common with wild birds, they are always on the lookout for enemies, and quickly detect hawks, dogs, strange persons, etc., that venture near. Their wild cries on such occasions soon put the intruders to rout, and also put all the fowls on the place on their guard. If hawks are numerous a few guinea in the flock will prove of great help in preventing their depredations.

Laying in Winter. Almost every hen running at large lays in the spring and lays well. If the poultryman can provide these conditions through winter, his hens will lay then the same as they do naturally in the spring.

Geese Pay Well. No kind of poultry keeping can be carried on at so small an expense for buildings and equipment as that of raising geese, because of the hardness of the birds, and their desire to remain in the open air.

STATE NEWS.

There are more half-starved dogs in town than ever before.—Owingsville Outlook.

Madison county is in the throes of an egg famine such as was never seen here before.—Richmond Climax.

A reckless member of the Legislature has introduced a bill to create another pauper county.—Hartsville Leader.

If the articles that have appeared in the newspapers of Kentucky on "good roads" during the last twelve months were clipped, out and pasted in a "string," they would reach around the world.—Danville Advocate.

Several head of cattle belonging to Squire John C. Trimble got into his tobacco barn recently and ate a large quantity of the weed. As a result three of them died and several others are in a very bad condition.—Mt. Sterling Advocate.

On the farm of W. J. Vancleave, formerly known as the Temple Cheving farm, about two and one-half miles west of Campbellsville, there stands a sassafras tree seventy-three and one-third feet in height, eight feet in circumference and has a spread of thirty feet. Robert R. Ramsey is the discoverer of this big tree and his measurements were made last Saturday.—Campbellsville News-Journal.

Mr. K. A. Browning raised last year on the farm he sold to H. J. Booker 8,493 pounds of tobacco on four and one-half acres of land. Heretofore The Favorite has made note of 1,900 pounds of tobacco growing on an acre of land, but are inclined to believe that Mr. Browning is the first to produce 1,900 pounds.—Franklin Favorite.

The good roads bill now pending in the House in Frankfort, it seems to us, ought to pass. Only by having the State to give aid in building substantial roads can we hope to see this character of improvement in the present generation. And good roads, next to thorough education, is what Kentucky needs more than anything else at this time.—Owensboro Messenger.

During the year 1911 not more than three crops of hemp were raised in Bourbon county, and the entire acreage did not equal as much as 200 acres. This condition was due in a large measure to the fact that it was almost impossible to get labor to break the hemp after it was raised. This year, however, the farmers of Bourbon county are planning to raise a large amount of hemp. Among those who have signified their intention of raising the crop is the firm of Woodford & Taylor, who plan to raise at least three hundred acres on their lands near Paris.—Paris News.

Indian Killed on Track. Near Rochelle, Ill., an Indian went to a railroad track and was killed by the fast express. He paid for his carelessness with his life. Often it is that way with people neglecting their safety. Don't risk your life when prompt use of Dr. King's New Discovery will cure coughs and colds. Don't risk your life when prompt use of Dr. King's New Discovery will cure throat and lung troubles. It completely cured me in a short time, of a terrible cough that followed a severe attack of Grip. I wrote to Watts & Gladd, Texas, and I regained 15 pounds in weight that I had lost. Quick, safe, reliable and guaranteed. $1.50. Trial bottle free at all dealers.

State Nation Plan Agricultural Co-Operation.

Kentucky probably will get a substantial sum from the National Government to aid in the organization of boys' corn growing clubs and the general dissemination of literature that will teach the farmers of the state how to apply scientific methods in farming. A representative of the national department of Agriculture was in Frankfort recently conferring with Commissioner of Agriculture Newman regarding the part that will be played by the state and nation. A bill is now pending before the Legislature appropriating $10,000 for this purpose, and if it is passed and becomes a law the government probably will send to Kentucky an equal sum giving the Commissioner of Agriculture a fund of $20,000.

Flylar Men Fall victims to stomach, liver and kidney troubles just like other people, with like results in loss of appetite, backache, and tired, listless, run-down feeling. But there's no need to feel like that as Dr. D. Peabody, Henry, Tenn., proved. "Six bottles of Electric Bitters," he writes, "did more to give me new strength and good appetite than all other stomach remedies I used." So they help everybody. It's folly to suffer when this great remedy will help you from the first dose. Try it. Only 50 cents at all dealers.

Guess Work. One of the main causes of failure in the dairy business is caused by guess work. Of course, guess work is as good as any when it hits, but to many are bad guessers. Don't guess, but know that the cows have all the drinkable water, good feed, dry bedding and good treatment. In short, know they are comfortable. Don't guess that they are. Be sure you know, then you are on the road to success.

This is the season of the year when mothers fell very much concerned over the frequent colds contracted by their children, and have abundant reason for it as every cold weakens the lungs, lowers the vitality and paves the way for the more serious diseases that so often follow, Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is famous for its cures, and is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by all dealers.

CAUSE AND REMEDY.

Uncertainty of the immediate future is looked upon by many men of affairs, as a blockade to enterprise and business prosperity, and this blockade is now quite apparent throughout the channels of trade.

The Presidential Election; the efforts of Congress with no fixed purpose; Organized Labor as a new factor in politics; together with other matters of greater or less import, represent at this time a chaotic conflict of separate interests, to harmonize which is now the problem before the country.

STATE NEWS.

Jenkins, Feb. 21.—The smallpox situation here is well in hand, no new cases having developed. All the patients are doing well.

At Carlisle lambs and wool are being contracted for. Six cents is offered for early lambs and twenty cents for wool, but holders are slow in accepting these prices.

Tom Hodgen, the wild varmint man, has placed an order in the West for a carload of prairie dogs and jack rabbits. This week he purchased of Mr. Wm. Arvin 17 goats.—Campbellsville Enquirer.

Several head of cattle belonging to John C. Trimble got into his tobacco barn recently and ate a large quantity of tobacco. As a result three of them died and several others are in a very dangerous condition.

Montgomery and other upper Kentucky counties where cattle feeding is extensively practiced have been almost overrun with crows for the past few weeks. They swarm in the feed lots and play havoc with the grain put out for stock.

T. P. Kimsay, one of our good farmers, who has been looking for a new location, picked out a spot in Arkansas and last week moved his family to Jonesboro, where he resided three days, moving back to Ballard county, and now resides near Oscar.—Wickliffe Yeoman.

Carlisle, Feb. 21.—Some of the farmers say that they are practically unable to sell their corn and procure any more in the county. What little fodder is available is bringing 50 cents a shock for the poorest quality. The supply of hay has been almost exhausted and baled hay here is selling for $30 a ton.

Georgetown, Feb. 22.—In the case of George Lancaster and the Lancaster Hotel Company, indicted for suffering gaming on their premises, the jury imposed a fine of $200 upon Lancaster and $500 upon the corporation. The indictment was brought about by the discovery of a number of boys engaged in a game of craps in the basement of the hotel.

Lexington, Feb. 21.—Because five members of the grand jury refused to vote to indict several citizens for alleged election frauds in Georgetown, Ky., Circuit Judge Stout today ordered that none of them ever be allowed to serve again as a juror in Scott county, while he presided. The frauds were alleged to have been committed in Central and Eastern Kentucky in the State Democratic primary elections last July.

Georgetown, Ky., Feb. 22.—Circuit Judge Robert L. Stout vacated the bench for a week's consideration of the affidavit made by City Treasurer John White, in which White claimed that he could not obtain a fair trial with Judge Stout presiding. Mr. White alleged in his affidavit that Judge Stout had, in the presence of Robert H. Anderson, stated that he was a highwayman and thief and ought to be in the penitentiary.

G. F. Emerson, of Montgomery Ala., purchased fourteen head of horses and mules in Elizabethtown recently at fair prices. The purchaser was compelled to consent to the following Green for inspection, consigning them afterwards to Alabama, as there is no inspector of stock in Harlan county. Stock feeders and dealers are very much opposed to the present inspection laws in Kentucky, as the fees of inspection deprives them of part of their profits on their purchases, and as the stockmen of other counties are forced to ship their stock to other counties for inspection, when shipped to Alabama.

Man 124 Years Old Called By Death.

Columbia, Ky., Feb. 22.—Information of the death of John Morgan, which occurred on Indian Creek, Clinton county, a few days ago, has just reached here. He was perhaps the oldest man in the world. He came to this country from Germany in 1812. His papers show he was a soldier in the War of 1812, as he drew a pension for this service for many years. His papers give his age as 24 at the time he enlisted. Taking that as a cue, he was about 124 years old when he died. He became a citizen of Clinton county about fifty years ago, and found employment in coal mines at Cumberland City. When a young man he was a good boxer. He entertained crowds with his skill as often as he could find a person to stand before him, which would be but a few minutes. In his younger days he was an entertaining conversationalist and the stories he would relate of his experiences were thrilling. For ten or fifteen years before his death, his mind was greatly impaired.

TOBACCO POOL

Receives Accessions From Fayette County Burley Growers.

Lexington, Feb. 24.—At a well attended meeting of tobacco farmers addressed by Messrs. W. A. Byrson, Charles H. Berryman, C. F. Peterson, L. C. Ferguson, on behalf of the ten year pooling plan of the Burley Tobacco Society here this afternoon, it was stated by Mr. Berryman, who is the general manager of James B. Haggin's Elmendorf Farm, that a pool will be declared March 1 and that the establishment of a tobacco pool in Kentucky is a step and in size to none in the United States will within 18 months be an accomplished fact.

Vice President Ferguson and Mr. Byrson explained the plan as having been naturally evolved out of the experience in pooling the crops of 1906 and 1907, cutting out the crop in 1908 and 1910 continually being against the effort of the American Tobacco Company for the high prices which they claim the organized growers are forcing.

Mr. Patrick stated that "very shortly the Burley Tobacco Co. will have some quite important announcements to make to the growers concerning its plan."

It is rumored that an option has already been taken on a vast amount of tobacco manufacturing plant in that section of the announcements to be made concerns the purchase of this machinery.

At the conclusion of the meeting Fayette County landholders affixed their signatures to contracts pledging 250 acres to the pool and John T. Denton announced that he would on Monday bring in the pledge of himself and his sons for 2,000 acres more. Previously there had been pledged in this county nine thousand acres.

THOMAS J. WALTON

After a Lingerin Illness of Several Months Passes into Rest On the Shore of That Mysterious Sea.

The Loving Wife and Children Have Sustained An Irreparable Loss.

T. J. Walton died at his home four miles out on the Bellevue pike, last Monday afternoon, after an illness of several months of a disease that terminated in dropsy. He was born May 7th, 1864, and was a son of the late John E. and Missouri McGlasson Walton, and was one of a family of nine children, five boys and four girls—Laura V., Daisy, Margaret H. and Alice C. The mother and all of her children except one, George P., who married Jan Rogers, and Napoleon B., survive.

August 17, 1886, T. J. Walton and Miss Eliza Hunt were united in marriage and led a happy and prosperous married life and nearly sixteen years. To them were born six children—Joseph, who is 14 years old, William, Thomas Alice, Ruth and a baby, all of whom and their mother, survive the father.

Mr. Walton was a very large man and when in good health weighed considerably over 300 pounds, but was an energetic and industrious man and managed most successfully his large farm of several hundred acres, giving numerous men employment at good wages, treating them with the greatest consideration under all conditions.

He was a member of the Odd-Fellows' lodge and the Baptist church at Bellevue, and met every obligation imposed by these organizations cheerfully, contributing freely of his time and means in their behalf and the support of their teachings. The funeral took place yesterday at 2 o'clock at Bellevue Baptist church, Revs. Allie Stith, Baptist, and Edgar C. Riley, Christian, officiating, after which the Odd-Fellows interred the body according to the funeral rites in the cemetery near the town.

In the death of T. J. Walton his family lost a loving and faithful husband and father; his community, a most excellent neighbor, and the county one of its most reliable and worthy citizens, whom to know was to admire his many good traits being portrayed by an honest, open countenance that was sustained by a big, noble heart.

In all his dealings T. J. Walton was thoroughly upright, and it matters not from what angle his life is viewed it is found consistent with the teaching of the two orders with which he held membership.

Death, under any circumstances, is most reliable and sad when it comes to a man in the prime of life and surrounded by a family of small children who need his fatherly care and admonitions, but a faithful mother left to watch over and guide them. The family has the sympathy of all in its affliction.

He Was from Kentucky. When Speaker Champ Clark, of Missouri, was Prosecuting Attorney of Pike county, an old darky came into his office, at Louisiana one morning and, after beating around the bush for some minutes, brought forth the object of his visit, says the New York Herald.

"Was you bawn in Kentucky, Ma's Champ?" he inquired, cautiously.

"Sure, Uncle Henry."

"He had sphynx you wuz, wuz once, but the other mornin' when you made dat speech agin Sam Collins and say dat whiky waz de greatest obbl in de wuz I begin to hab misdoubts."

"What's where I was born got to do with it Uncle Henry? It's a fact, isn't it?"

"You was in Kentucky myself, an' I haint givin' off no pinion on dat subject, but you'd please me clear down to de groun' 'bout you'd tell me if de persecutin' attorney has got to swear to his speech, or is he jes' talkin' to de jury?"

TOBACCO MARKET

Prices The Past Week Have Been Recordbreakers.

Hopkinsville, February 23.—The tobacco market is looking good to the farmer these days. The crop is not yet in, and there is a lively demand for the weed, with prices that would tell me if de persecutin' attorney has got to swear to his speech, or is he jes' talkin' to de jury."

Owensboro February 23.—On account of the severe winter in the Green River section, the wheat crop has been cut in half, farmers say. There is every indication that the failure of the wheat crop will cause much of the wheatland to be plowed under and tobacco planted, thereby increasing the acreage of the weed to a great extent in this district. Ninety per cent of the tobacco has been harvested and the growers are now burning plant beds, preparing for another crop.

Carlisle, Feb. 21.—Both prices and deliveries on the loose-leaf tobacco markets made new records here during the last week. Receipts amounted to more than 1,000,000 pounds, with prices advanced to about 700,000, with prices going as high as $32 a hundred for best quality of lugs. Some growers were getting as much as $22 a hundred. The receipts were so heavy that the Farmers' Loose Leaf House has been filled for every sale and in addition Reed Bros., have opened a new warehouse on the second floor of the old Continental House.

A special train from Richmond, Tuesday night, that the Madison Tobacco Warehouse sold a lot of fine burley for the price of $1.10 per lb. This is the highest ever known in the state and possibly ever in the world. From Missouri, and would like to see the basket, the buyer and the seller. If such prices as these hold over in season, it's the real market of the tobacco business. A county houses probably hold a better average than any of them, as there are no "pinhookers" or speculators, and the buyers give all that it is worth.—Winchester Democrat.

Lexington, Feb. 23.—The past week has been a recordbreaker in the Lexington tobacco market. Four new high marks being reached. Fifty dollars per 100 pounds reached in one instance; an average of $1.24 was received for a crop of 3,000 pounds; an average of $12.00 was paid for all of the tobacco sold last week and the quantity sold was 3,300,000 pounds, which was more than for any previous week's sales. The total amount sold on this market for the season to date now aggregates 28,000,000 pounds and the season's average is $14.45. Notwithstanding the heavy receipts during the entire season the average price has steadily gone up. The average for the opening week of the season was $1.05, which was $1.01 a hundred lower than the average for last week. While the market for the last few days has shown signs of weakening under the heavy receipts, and the warehouses are full and the demand is crowded with tobacco waiting to be sold, it is believed that nearly all of the tobacco in the Burley belt has been sold, and with the receipts soon being brought to a halt there will be little if any decline in the present standard of prices.

BOYS AND GIRLS AGAIN

The attendance at the Grown-Ups Day exceeded all expectations, being one of the best attended agricultural and educational meetings ever held here. The topics discussed were of great interest to farmers and their wives and to the public in general.

Senator Bradley has decided that President Taft is to have the Kentucky delegation in the Republican national convention to be held this year. The Senator so announced without a conference with any of the Kentucky Republican leaders. For a while it appeared that the Sixth District would be obsequious but the magnetic Senator lined up the leaders in a hurry one good fat office had a very soothing effect.

THE PAGEANT TO BE SPECTACULAR

Historic Feature of "World in Cincinnati" to be Impressive and Instructive.

OUTLINE OF THE FIVE EPISODES

Many of the Thrilling and Dramatic Incidents of the History of Missions Will Be Re-enacted by Players at Exposition.

The Pageant of Darkness and Light is to be the most spectacular feature of the great Missionary Exposition, "The World in Cincinnati," at Music Hall, March 9 to April 6. The purpose of the pageant is to set forth the great historical events of missionary effort in an instructive and inspiring way.

It will be probably the greatest spectacular presentation Cincinnati has ever seen. In four of the five episodes, from 150 to 200 people will be on the platform. More than 3,000 persons, volunteers, are being trained for the Pageant. There will be 1,500 in the grand choir alone and another 1,500 for the platform are to serve in relays on different days. More than 1,000 children will take part also. The costumes and splendid scenery used at the first presentation of the Pageant in London, England, have been brought to Cincinnati for its production.

The five scenes which constitute the Pageant may be briefly summarized as follows:

Episode I.—The North.

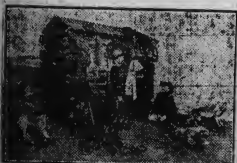

The scene represents an Indian camp in the far Northwest. The chief and his wife are in distress at the loss of their little daughter, who strayed from the line of march three days ago. To the camp comes a band of Eskimos for trading purposes. The medicine man incites the braves to kill them. Just as they are about to do so a missionary enters. He brings the chief's little daughter, whom he found straying in the woods. Thus he gains the chief's good will and a hearing for his message.

Episode II.—The South.

The scene is in the outskirts of Ujjai, where Livingstone is resting for a while after long journeyings. His men are building a mission house. During mid-day rest Livingstone is full of thoughts of home. A runner comes panting in with news of the coming of a white man. Then Stanley enters. He begs Livingstone to return with him. Livingstone's men hang upon his words. He is sorely tempted, but—no, he can not go until his work is done.

Episode III.—The East.

Scene I. is in a city in India. A crowd surrounds the missionaries' house, clamoring for the return to her relatives of a child-wife, whom they have been educating. The child flees down the street, the relatives follow, capture her, and return in triumph. In Scene II, a native procession is going to a temple. There enters a funeral procession, leading a young woman to the funeral pyre of her husband. Just as the pyre is to be lighted the Government official strides in with a proclamation doing away with the "suttee," as the rite of widow burning was called.

Episode IV.—The West.

The scene is a coral beach in Hawaii. Behind is the volcano Kilauea. A wedding group is sporting in the sunshine. The volcano roars. One recalls the fact that when Pele, the Goddess of the lake of fire, is angered, she sends her priest to claim victims to appease her wrath. The priest is seen on the mountain-side. He claims the bridegroom, and a child playing unconsciously among the flowers. As he is about to lead them to their doom, Queen Papihānā appears and defies Pele. The priest curses her. She bids him lead her to the crater, and there—after the fashion of Elijah on Carmel—she taunts and defies the goddess, and breaks the power of Pele forever.

Episode V.—The Final Procession. Singing a grand procession, the great choir, and all who have taken part in the previous episodes, march in four different processions down the aisles of the Pageant Hall, forming in a tableau on the platform around a cross, and all bearing golden palm branches. The closing chorus is sung and, at a signal from the drums of the orchestra of 30 pieces, the entire audience rise and sing the long metre doxology.

The Pageant in Cincinnati. This Pageant is to be reproduced for the second time in America, in the auditorium of the Music Hall, every afternoon and evening, from March 9 to April 6th. This building is admirably adapted to it, more so than any of those in which it has been presented.

A Wife's Cruelty.
"I didn't mind it when she attacked me with an ax," said the petitioner for divorce on the grounds of cruelty, testifying in a Philadelphia court, "because I can handle a woman with an ax, and the feeling that prompts a wife to attack her husband with an ax is transitory, but I could not stand for the cats."

Mr. Voss testified that as his wife was an active member of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals he feared to use force to put the cats out of the house. He might have slept with one eye open and adopted such means of self-preservation as might have been necessary in the event of his wife's attempting retaliatory tactics with an ax as the instrument for the accomplishment of her purpose. But he could not face the prospect of arrest for cruelty to animals and he could not positively could not continue to occupy a home with several pet cats and to occupy in that home a position subordinate to the cats.

The cats, aware the petitioner were "up stairs and down stairs" in his lady's chamber. They were also in the petitioner's chair, in his bed, in his way. There was no escape save to leave home, and when everything else closes up even a man whose tastes are not domestic likes to feel that he can go home if he likes. There's a little edge to the effect that you can go home when you can go nowhere else. But the adage lacks power to console when five cats must be met, and not conquered but knocked under to upon arriving at home.

The suit was not contested. Evidently there was no intention upon the part of the actual petitioner for the Society of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to allow a mere divorce to stand in the way of kind treatment to cats. The petition was granted, as to whether the cats remain in undisturbed possession of the home the correspondent is silent. That is a question to be settled in accordance with the ownership of the property, or the name of the lessee as the case may be. But lovers of cats may rejoice to know that there will be no cruelty to the animals as a result of the difference of opinion between Mr. and Mrs. Voss as to the relative importance of the comfort of cats and husband. Lovers of liberty will be glad to see the law blaze the trail to freedom for the husband who "can handle a woman with an ax," but who cannot cope outside of court with a representative of the S. P. C. A. who has a fondness of cats.

Feed for Stallion.

The feed for a stallion depends some on the condition of the animal, but, as a rule good sound well-cleaned oats is the best feed. With horses, as with other stock, an occasional change of ration is good. If you will feed oats and give an occasional feed of corn or barley, preferably corn, just for variety, this will be the best kind of feed you can give your horse. In connection with the above grains a little wheat bran is often very good, as it assists in keeping the general health of the stallion a little higher than if no wheat bran is fed.

Hay, like grain, should be clean and not moldy, musty, nor dusty. The idea that some particular feed will materially benefit your horse is a mistake. Any kind of feed, such as the grains referred to above, that will aid in building up his general strength, health and vigor, should be fed regularly, disregarding most of the commercial feeds that are now on the market.

Dust Causes Hail and Snow.

If there were no dust particles in the air there would be no rain, hail or snow. From a perfectly dustless atmosphere the moisture would descend in ceaseless rain without drops, says the New York Sun. The dust particles, which are invisible to the naked eye, serve as nuclei about which the vapor gathers. The snow crystal is the most beautiful creation of the aerial moisture, and the hailstone is the most extraordinary. The heart of every hailstone is a tiny atom of dust. Such an atom, with a little moisture condensed about it, is the germ from which the hailstone grows. It is capable of felling a man or smashing a window. But first it must be caught up by a current of air and carried to the level of the lofty cirrus clouds five or six or even ten miles high. Then, continually growing by fresh accretions of moisture, it begins its long plunge to earth, spinning through the clouds and flashing in the sun like a diamond bolt shot from a rainbow.

Flying Men Fall
Victims to stomach, liver and kidney troubles just like other people, with like results in loss of appetite, backache, and tired, run-down feeling. But there's no need to feel like that as T. D. Peebles, Henry, Tenn., proved. "Six bottles of Electric Bitters," he writes, "did more to give me new strength and good appetite than all other stomach remedies I used." So they help everybody. Its folly to suffer when this great remedy will help you from the first dose. Try it. Only 50 cents at all dealers.

A special to the Democrat from the Bloomingdale section says that the fowls are dying by the bunches of a disease which is baffling the most learned of poultry raisers. All varieties of medicine have been used with no results and one lady lost about fifty last week within a few days.

The Strawberry Industry.

The strawberry growers of Warren county, according to a dispatch from Bowling Green, are making preparation for a banner season. The fields of mulched plants are said to have stood the severe winter in good shape and will be in splendid condition for crop.

The production of berries in Warren county this year, it is estimated, will be nearly 300 per cent greater than it was in 1911. The Strawberry Growers' Association has closed its contracts for crates and is expecting to sell something like $200,000 worth of fruit during the shipping season. When it is considered that the industry is in its infancy in Warren county and only within the last five years has come to be a commercial proposition of importance, the results attained have been remarkable. If present expectations are realized the county will become famous all over the country for its berries, and berry growing will prove a permanent and prodigious source of income.

There are splendid profits to be made in the cultivation of strawberries, and Kentucky soil is adapted to the production of a superior quality of this succulent fruit. The instance of what may be done has been demonstrated in the line is given by a writer in the Cynthiana Log Cabin, who says: "From a patch of strawberries planted and cultivated properly you may reasonably expect a yield of anywhere from 125 to 175 bushels per acre and a price that will net you clear of the expense of picking crates and shipping, $3 to $2.50 per bushel."

Miss Ellen Trabue, of near Ruddies Mills, Bourbon county, a well-known strawberry grower, in 1899, from a patch of three-quarters of an acre gathered and sold 153 bushels of strawberries that netted her clear of the expense of picking crates and shipping $225 per bushel. That would be equal to $450 per acre. C. B. fruit grower of near Cynthiana, in the spring of 1906, planted two and one-half acres in strawberries between the trees of a young orchard, which he had planted the previous fall, and in 1907 gathered fruit that sold for a little over $600.

Doubtless there are growers in Warren county and in other counties of Kentucky who could relate equally interesting experiences. Every owner of a strawberry patch may not have obtained results like these, but the fact remains that the crop is highly profitable and brings enormously better return for the labor involved than many other crops. The demand for berries is almost limitless and crop failures practically unknown. Strawberry growing should become one of Kentucky's gigantic agricultural industries and, if the growers in the various localities will follow the business-like example that is being set for them in Warren county, Kentucky can be made as famous for strawberries as she is for tobacco.—C. J.

Drinking at Meals.

Physicians claim that water can be taken with the meals provided it is not over one glass, and more will not be harmful. It is an old fashioned and disputed idea that water must not be taken with the meals, for it is recommended in small quantities. The only reason it is not insisted upon more is because masticsation is essential, the saliva being needed in the process of digestion, and if one washes food down without chewing it properly, harm will come. It is, therefore, inflammation, defective nutrition, rheumatism, and the like are caused by poisonous accumulations in the body, which copious water drinking between meals is intended to wash out of the system daily. If too little water is taken, every organ is liable to become diseased, it is certain to follow.—Medical Magazine.

Peacock 110 Years Old.

Thomas Lambert, a farmer of Sulphur, W. Va., Metcalfe county, is believed to be the owner of the oldest peafowl in the world. The bird apparently is just as active as ever. He has roosted in trees 110 years.

In 1816 Horatio Thompson came to Kentucky from Virginia, bringing with him this peafowl. The bird was then between 10 and 15 years old. When Mr. Thompson died this gay knight of fowldom passed to Thomas Lambert.

For seventy-five years this peafowl roosted on the same limb of a large oak tree until the tree was cut down. This bird is known over all of southern Kentucky, and Peafowl School in Metcalfe county, was named in his honor.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

David Clements got badly hurt last Friday week by a horse throwing him on a pile of rock, near the school house. The heavy sleet that made its appearance one morning last week broke the limbs off of many trees in this neighborhood and more especially the cedar trees. Herbert Kirkpatrick, the Burlington man, made an early start for Gunpowder creek last Tuesday morning and by noon rounded up a nice bunch of fine turkeys. The early bird gets the worm, says Herbert.

GUNPOWDER

Ira Tanner is wrestling with a case of rheumatism. J. S. Rouse delivered two loads of lumber to Erlanger parties last week. Miss Madge Williams is ill at the home of her sister, Mrs. Arch Dickerson, near White Haven. Mrs. Chas. Ayler and children were guests of her mother, Mrs. Ernest Horton, last Saturday. Robert Rouse, of Covington, was the guest of his sister, Mrs. Lonnie Rouse, on Thursday night of last week. The tobacco crop is beginning to move. Several loads passed here last week to be delivered to Thos. Stevenson at Erlanger. H. L. Tanner has arranged to prize his 1900 crop of tobacco, and will put it on the market at Cincinnati instead of selling the loose leaf. This writer called on L. H. Buaty at Erlanger, last Friday. He has converted the old school house which he purchased, recently, into a shop, which makes an ideal place for his business, which he reports is being good. Mrs. Susan Barlow met with quite a serious accident, last Sunday morning. While walking on some ice she fell and hurt one of her legs, which is giving her considerable trouble. At the Joint Council meeting at Hopeful last Saturday the three churches, Hopeful, Hebron and Ebenezer, were well represented. The officers elected for the ensuing year were as follows: B. A. Floyd, Chairman. J. S. Surface, Secretary. E. H. Surface, Treasurer. O. C. Hafer and E. O. Rouse, Executive Committee.

Cody has moved to the Hugh Carey farm near Florence. Mr. and Mrs. Ben Cook have the sympathy of this community in the death of their beloved son, Herbert, aged 14 years. The remains were followed to the Christian church and Independence Sunday morning by a large company of sorrowing friends. Bro. Runyan of Latonia conducted the funeral service and spoke words of comfort to the bereaved family. Herbert was much loved by his many little friends and classmates. Burial in the Independence cemetery.

VERONA
Colds and grippes are quite prevalent in this neighborhood. Farmers anticipate planting a large crop of tobacco this season. Wm. Hughes' sale was well attended, last Saturday, and every thing sold for good prices. Mrs. J. M. Powers spent last Sunday at the bedside of her sick daughter, Mrs. Maude Johnson, of Walton, who is quite ill. Hume & Roberts, tobacco merchants of this place, shipped a car load of loose leaf to Lexington, last week, and to try that market.

The angel of death passed this way and removed from earth Medford Morgan, last Sunday night at 4:30 o'clock. The deceased was afflicted with asthma and complication of diseases, and being advanced in age, was unable to stand his affliction. We were sorry to learn of the death of Mrs. Nell Showers, formerly of this place but now of Crittenden. She passed to her reward, Wednesday, Feb. 21. The deceased was a consistent member of New Bethel church and was much loved by all who knew her. The funeral was preached at Crittenden, Thursday, after which the remains were borne to New Bethel cemetery and buried in the great resurrection. The deceased leaves a devoted husband and many relatives and friends to mourn her death. The husband has the sympathy of the entire community in their sad loss.

Pros. Prather, principal of the Walton school sent a suggestion to Miss Hamilton, principal of Verona Graded school, that the two schools meet on the platform of English, by way of an old fashion "Spelling Bee." Miss Hamilton responded with an invitation for Walton school to come to Verona, as the schedule of the trains was favorable to that arrangement. Accordingly on the evening of the 21st inst., ten pupils on each side selected from the Freshman and Eighth grades, engaged in a pleasant contest, which terminated in favor of Verona. Much interest and wholesome enthusiasm were manifested on each side. We very much appreciate this old time sociability between institutions of learning, and trust the custom may extend to the various departments.

abroad with his wife, who was an actress before he married her. You know that?" as he moved.

"I heard something of it in the village," Lestrangle admitted gravely. "Please do not think me fond of gossip; I could not avoid it. But I should not have imagined this a family likely to make low marriages."

"It never happened before. I never saw that cousin, nor did Dick; but he was always a disappointment, always. Uncle Ethan has told me. And since he failed, and Dick fails, there is only me."

"You!"

She nodded, her lip quivering.

"Only me. Not as a substitute—I am not fit for that—but as a substitute. I have promised my uncle to marry the first one who is able to be that."

The silence was absolute. Lestrangle neither moved nor spoke, gazing down at her bent head with an expression blending many shades.

"It is a duty; there is no one except me," she added. "Only sometimes I grow to dislike it too much. I am so selfish that sometimes I hope a substitute will never come."

Her voice died away. It was done; she, Emily French, had deliberately confided to this stranger that which an hour before she would have believed no one could force from her lips in articulate speech. And she neither regretted nor was ashamed, although there was time for full realization before Lestrangle answered.

"I did not believe," he said, "that such things could be done. It is not senseless. It is the kind of situation Miss French, where any man is justified in interfering. I beg you will leave the affair in my hands and think no more of such morbid self-sacrifice."

Stupefied, Emily hung back her head, staring at him.

"In your hands?"

"Since there are none better, it appears. Why," his vivid face questioned her full and straightly, "you didn't imagine that any man living could hear what you are doing, and pass on?"

"Your uncle—"

"Your uncle—is not for me to criticize. But do not ask any other man to let you go on."

Her ideas reeling, she struggled for comprehension.

"You, what could you do?" she marvelled.

"The substitute—"

"There won't be any substitute," replied Lestrangle with perfect coolness. "I shall train Dick French to do his work."

"You—"

"I can, and I will."

"Oh, yes, he can; he is just idle and spoiled," the firm lips set more firmly. "He shall take his place; I can handle him."

Emily sat quite helplessly, her eyes black with excitement. Slowly recollection flowed back to her of a change in Dick since his light contact with Lestrangle; his avoidance of even occasional highballs, his awakening interest in the clean sport of the races, and his half-wistful admiration for the virile driver-manager.

"I almost believe you could," she conceded.

"I can," repeated Lestrangle. "Only," he smiled, "it will be hard on Dick."

It was the touch needed, the antidote to sentiment. Emily laughed with him, laughed in sheer mischief and relief and leap of youth.

"You will be gentle—poor Dick!"

"I'll be gentle. He is coming now, I think." He took a step nearer her. "You will leave this in my care, won't you? You will not trouble about a substitute?"

"I will leave it with you. But you are forgetting your own doctrine; you are taking some one else's work to do."

"Pardon. I am merely making French do his work. I have seen a little more of him than you perhaps know; I understand what I am undertaking. Moreover, I would forget a great many doctrines to set you free."

"Free?" she echoed; she had the sensation of being suddenly confronted with an open door into the unexpected.

"Free," he quietly reassured. "Free to live your own life and draw unhindered breath, and to decide the great question when it comes, with thought only of yourself."

She drew back; a president dimly fell sharply across her late relief; a panic crossed with strange delight.

"He's off," called Dick, emerging from the park. "I made Anderson take him down with the limousine. At least, Rupert is driving while Anderson sits alongside and holds on; when they came to the turn in the avenue, your previous mechanic took it full speed and then apologized for going so slowly because, as he said, he was an amateur and likely to upset. Is he really a good driver, Lestrangle?"

"Pretty fair," returned Lestrangle seriously from his seat on the edge of the detached machine. "Why I'm not using him, he's employed as an expert on the factory car test; and when we're racing I give him the wheel if I want to fix anything. However, I'm obliged to that steering-knuckle for breaking here, instead of leaving me down to a long wait in the wilds. Come down to the shop tomorrow at six, and Rupert and I will even up by taking you for a run."

"Who? me? You're asking me?"

"Why not? It's exhilarating."

Dick removed his hat and ran his fingers through his hair, gratification and alarm mingling in his expression with somewhat the effect of the small boy who is first invited into a game with his older brother's clique.

"You—er, wouldn't smash me up?" he hesitated.

"I haven't smashed up Rupert or myself, so far. If you feel timid, never mind of course; I'll take my usual companion."

Dick flushed all over his plump face, the French blood up at last.

"I was only joking," he hastily explained. "I'll come. It's only that you're so confoundingly reckless sometimes. Lestrangle, and—"

But I'll come."

Lestrangle gave his fine, glinting smile as he rose to salute Emily.

"All right. If you don't get down to the factory in time, I'll call for you," he promised.

CHAPTER V.

There was a change in the French affairs, a lightening of the atmosphere, a vague quickening and stir of healthful cheer in the days that followed. The somber master of the house met in in Bailey's undisguised the successful business now taxing the factory's resources, met it yet again in Emily's pretty gaiety and content. But most strikingly was he confronted with an alteration in Dick.

It was only a week after his first morning ride with Lestrangle, that Dick electrified the company at dinner by turning down the glass at his plate.

"I've cut out elaret, and that sort of thing," he announced. "It's bad for the nerves."

His three companions looked up in complete astonishment. It was Saturday night and by ancient custom Bailey was dining at the house.

"What has happened to you? Have you been attending a revival meeting?" the young man's uncle inquired with sarcasm.

"It's bad for the nerves," repeated Dick. "There isn't any reason why I shouldn't like to do anything other fellows do. Let's—that is, none of the men who drive cars ever touch that stuff, and look at their nerve."

Mr. French contemplated him with the irritation usually produced by display of delectable virtue, but found no comment. Emily gazed at the table, her mouth curving in spite of all effort at seriousness.

"You're right, Mr. Dick," said Bailey dryly. "Stick to it."

And Dick stuck, without as much as a single lapse. Frenchwood saw comparatively little of him, as time went on, the village and factory mesh. He lost some weight, and acquired a coat of reddish tan.

Emily watched and admired in silence. She had not seen Lestrangle again, but it seemed to her that his influence over all the life of both house and factory. Sometimes this showed so plainly that she believed Mr. French must see, must feel the silent force at work. But either he did not see or chose to ignore. And Dick was incautious.

"I'm going to buy one of our roadsters myself," he stated one day. "Can I have it at cost?"

Mr. French felt for his place-nex.

"You? Why do you not use the limousine?"

"Because I don't want to go around in a box driven by a chauffeur. I want a classy car to run myself. I've been driving some of the stripped cars, lately, and I like it."

"I will give you a car, if you want one," answered his uncle, quite kindly. "Go select any you prefer."

"Thank you," Dick sat up, beaming. "But I'll have to wait my turn, we've orders ahead now. Lestrangle says I've no right to come in and make some other fellow wait."

Mr. French slowly stiffened.

"We do not require lessons in ethics from this Lestrangle," was the cold rebuke. "I shall telephone Bailey to send up your car at once."

Rupert brought the sixty-horse-power roadster to the door, three hours later. And Emily appreciated that Lestrangle was discreet as well as compelling, when she found the black-eyed young mechanic was detailed to accompany Dick's maiden trip; which duty was fulfilled, incidentally, with the fine tact of a Richelieu.

In May there was a still greater occasion of work at the factory. In addition, the first of June was to open with a twenty-four hour race at Beach track, and Lestrangle was entered for it. Excitement was in the air; Dick came in the house only to eat and sleep.

The day before the race, Mr. French walked into the room where his niece was reading.

"I want to see Bailey," he said briefly. "Do you wish to drive me down to the factory, or shall I have Anderson bring around the limousine?"

"Please let us drive," she exclaimed, rising with alacrity. "I have not been to the factory for months."

"Very good. You are looking well, Emily, of late."

Surprised, a soft color swept the face she turned to him.

"I am well. Dear, I think we are all better this spring."

"Perhaps," said Ethan French. His bitter gray eyes passed deliberately over the large room with all its traces of a family life extending back to pre-Colonial times, but he said no more.

It was an exquisite morning, too virginal for June, too richly warm for May. When the two exchanged the sunny road for the factory office, a north room none too light, it was a moment before their dazzled eyes perceived no one was present. This was Bailey's private office, and its owner had passed into the room beyond.

"I will wait," conceded Mr. French, dismissing the boy who had ushered him into the room. Emily, Bailey will return directly, no doubt."

But Emily had already sat down, for she knew the voice speaking beyond the half-open door, and that the long-prevented meeting was now imminent.

"It will not do," Lestrangle was stating definitely. "It should be reinforced."

"It's always been strong enough."

Bailey's slower tones objected. "For years. It's not a thing likely to break."

"Not likely to break? Look at last year's record, Mr. Bailey, and tell me that. A broken steering-knuckle killed Brook in Indiana, another sent Little to the hospital in Massachusetts, the same thing wrecked the leader at the last Beach race and dashed him through the fence. Do you know what it means to the driver of a machine hurling itself along the narrow verge of destruction, when the steering-wheel suddenly turns useless in his grasp? Can you feel the sick helplessness, the confronting of death, the compressed second before the crash? Is it worth while to risk it for a bit of costless steel?"

The clear realism of the picture forced a pause, filled by the dull roar and the hum through the machinery-crowded building.

"They were not our cars that broke, any of them," Bailey insisted.

"Not our cars, no. But the steering-knuckle of my own machine broke under my hands last March, on the road, and if I had been on a curve instead of a straight stretch there would have been a wreck. As it was, I brought her to a stop in the ditch. There is no other thing that may not leave a fighting chance after it breaks but this leaves absolutely none. I know, you both know, that the steering-wheel is the only weapon in the driver's grasp. If it fails him, he goes out and his mechanic with him."

Emily paled, shrinking. She remembered the road under the maples and Lestrangle's laughing face as he leaned breathless across his useless wheel. That was what it had meant, then, the lightly treated episode!

"You'd better fix it like he wants it," advised Dick's disturbed tones. "Remember, he's got to drive the car Friday and Saturday, Bailey, not us."

"It's not alone for my racer I'm speaking, but for every car that leaves the shop," Lestrangle caught him up. "I'm not flinching; I've driven the car before and I will again. It may hold for ever, that part, but I've tested it and it's a weak point—take the warning for what it's worth."

There was a movement as if he rose with the last word. Emily laid her hand on the arm of the chair, turning her eyes on her uncle.

Surely if ever Mr. French was to meet his manager, this was the moment; when Lestrangle's ringing argument was still in their ears, his splendid force of earnestness still vibrant in the atmosphere. And suddenly she wanted them to stop, passionately wanted Ethan French's liking for this man.

"Uncle," she began. "Uncle—"

But it was not Lestrangle's light step that halted on the threshold.

"Why, I didn't know—" exclaimed Bailey.

"Excuse me, Mr. French, I've didn't tell me you were down."

He glanced over his shoulder; as he passed the door Emily faintly saw a head and an eye, as if the two young men left the next room. Bitterly disappointed, she sank back.

"That was your manager with your Mr. French," he said, looking up.

"Yes," he went up-stairs to see how the new drill is acting." Bailey pulled out a handkerchief and rubbed his brow. "Excuse me, it's warm. Yes, he wants me to strengthen a knuckle—he's spoken considerable about it. I guess he's right; better too much than too little."

"I do not see that follows. I should imagine that you understood building chassis better than this racing driver. You had best consult outside experts in construction before making a change."

"Uncle!" Emily cried.

"There's a twenty-four hour race starts tomorrow night. It's easy fixed, and we might be wrong."

"We have always made them this way."

"Yes, but—"

"Consult experts, then. I do not like your manager's tone; he is too assuming. Now let me see those papers."

Emily's parol slipped to the floor with a sharp crash as she stood up, quite pale and shaken.

"Uncle, Mr. Lestrangle knows," she appealed. "You heard him say what would happen—please, please let it be fixed."

Amazed, Mr. French looked at her, his face setting.

"You forget your dignity," he retorted in displeasure. "This is more childishness, Emily. Men will be consulted more competent to decide than this Lestrangle. They will do."

From one to the other she gazed, then turned away.

pany at this race."

"I do not agree with you."

Their eyes met in a long regard. Here, in the crowded room of workers, the ceaseless uproar shut in their conversation with a walled completeness of privacy.

"I'm not sure whether you know it, Lestrangle, but you've got me all stirred up since I met you," the younger man confessed plaintively. "You're different from other fellows and you've made me different. I'd rather be around the factory than anywhere else I know now. But honestly I like you too well to watch you race."

"I want you to come."

HOW WEAK WOMEN

May Be Made Strong at Small Expense and No Risk

There are hundreds of women in this vicinity, weak, thin, run-down, tired out and nervous. Such women need Vinol just as much as did Mrs. Jane Pepper, of 2307 Howard street, San Francisco, Cal., who says:

"I have used Vinol for some time with particularly gratifying results. I was run down, weak and debilitated, and my appetite was gone. After taking several bottles of Vinol I found my condition greatly improved, and do not hesitate to recommend Vinol to anyone similarly affected."

Vinol is not a secret nostrum, but a delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil, which will create an appetite, tone up the digestive organs, make pure blood and create strength. Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you.

"THE WORLD IN CINCINNATI"

Great Missionary Exposition Planned for Queen City will be a Memorable Event.

SCENES FROM HEATHEN LANDS

Will Be Erected at Music Hall From March 9th to April 6th, To Be Conducted on Mammoth Scale
By Experienced People.

One can not realize until he has seen it the tremendous scope of an Exposition such as "The World in Cincinnati" will be. It will be constructed on a mammoth scale, like the Ohio Valley Exposition, and will be entirely devoted to missions. It will be indeed a World's Exposition, for the ends of the earth will be represented in a most striking way. No ordinary exposition ever held in America will present so many unique and attractive features as are planned for this one. There is no finer building in America for such an enterprise than Music Hall. The whole of this great building will be utilized, including the splendid auditorium, the annexes and all subsidiary halls and spaces. Something is being planned for every nook and corner of the great building. The hundreds of thousands who attend will be astonished at the scale on which missions, both home and foreign, will be presented.

Things You Will See.

Will people in large numbers attend such an Exposition? Most assuredly. The attendance in Boston last spring totaled close to 375,000, and went as high as 35,000 on a single day. There will be far more to draw and interest the people than has ever been presented in an Exposition in Cincinnati. The Ohio Valley Exposition drew great crowds. Its interest was almost entirely local. "The World in Cincinnati" will converge in Music Hall the life and problems of the world. It will not simply appeal to those interested in missions, but to all.

Dispensary Scene, Medical Mission Section, "The World in Cincinnati."

Perhaps you have been in Chinatown, in New York or San Francisco, and you have wondered what a street in a real Chinese city would look like. Here you will have it. You will see the street as it is reproduced, with its joss houses, its apothecary shops, its Chinese houses, and its variegated street life. In the midst of it will be a Chinese pagoda. In this street you will see men, women, and children dressed in Chinese costume and so trained that you will almost imagine you have been transported to Peking or Canton.

You have perhaps heard of an East India "bazaar," and have wondered what it was like. Come to the Exposition and you will see one in operation, with all the things which make such a place of such vital interest in the Far East. You have heard much of the Zenanas of India. They are the secluded homes of India, where the women live the lives of prisoners. If you were in India and a man you could never hope to see the inside of one. In the Exposition you can see one as it is and study it at your leisure.

The Korean houses will be a constant source of interest to you. You will visit a Japanese home and will witness native tea parties and the odd customs of the people as they greet each other and go through their courteous greetings. You will see scenes enacted from Burma and the Philippines. An African village will be reproduced, and you will see real idols from India and other lands. Medical missions will be reproduced in a model hospital, and you will see the missionary illustrating his work of healing with living objects. Much space will be given to the North American Indians. A delegation of real Indians may be present from the Government School and will have a part in the daily program.

EXPOSITION RESTAURANT.

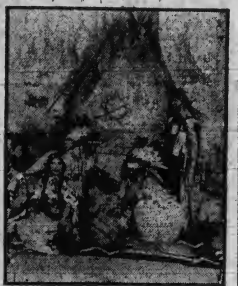

There will be a well-equipped restaurant at "The World in Cincinnati" exposition, to be given at Music Hall March 9 to April 6. It will be under the direction and management of those who have had experience in providing for large numbers of people. It will probably be located at one end of the "Hall of the Home Land." Visitors from out of town will find it to their advantage, especially, to remember that they may obtain their lunch or dinner at a first-class restaurant, paying moderate prices, without leaving the exposition.

PLANS FOR CHILDREN

Great Exposition Will Welcome the Boys and Girls.

Many Special Features for Them, as Well as Reduced Prices of Admission.

One of the purposes, it may almost be said the main purpose, for which "The World in Cincinnati" exposition, to be open in Music Hall, Cincinnati, from March 9 to April 6, was organized was to interest Boys and Girls in Missionary work at home and abroad, and to inspire them for Missionary service. The promoters are making arrangements to welcome boys and girls of all churches, and no churches, to admit them at greatly reduced rates, and to engage specially qualified stewards and speakers for them. The Children will find every part of the Exposition full of things which will appeal to their understanding and interest, and the games and other occupations of children in all countries will be illustrated continuously by actual reproduction.

Group of Indians From Carlisle's School, "The World in Boston."

Boys and girls of fourteen years of age and under will be admitted to the Exposition at reduced prices at any time. For such the single admission ticket of 25 cents is reduced to 15 cents.

ARMY OF VOLUNTEERS

Great Exposition Has Enlisted
Fourteen Thousand Workers

Two Hundred Churches Are Co-Operating to Make Success of "World in Cincinnati."

A total of about 14,000 volunteer workers have been enlisted for "The World in Cincinnati" Missionary Exposition, which will be open in Music Hall March 9 to April 6. The names of this army of people have been received from more than 200 churches of Cincinnati and vicinity.

The workers are divided into several classes. There are more than 5,000 stewards, men and women, both young and old, who will serve in relays and populate the various scenes and sections of the Exposition, explaining to visitors everything that may be seen. Most of these stewards will wear the costume of the country to which they have been assigned. There are nearly 5,000 Pageant workers also. About half of the Pageant workers are members of the grand choir. They will sing the splendid choruses of the Pageant of Darkness and Light, wearing a suitable costume and occupying seats in the Pageant hall outside of the proscenium arch. The other half of the Pageant workers take the parts of the people of various foreign lands upon the platform, impersonating American Indians, Eskimos, natives of Africa, people of India and Hawaiians.

There will be at least 1,000 ushers, all men, who will act as guides, doorkeepers and in other ways keep the crowds moving. In all about 2,500 children will be required. Several hundred of these will be trained to play the games which the children of foreign lands play, and this they will do in the different foreign scenes of the Exposition, thus illustrating the child life of non-Christian lands. All will wear appropriate costumes.

Besides these three groups of children, all of whom are to have work to do in the Exposition proper, between 1,500 and 2,000 are being enrolled to take part in the great final episode of the Pageant of Darkness and Light. They will march in a procession down one of the aisles of the Pageant hall to the platform, where, with all of the other Pageant participants, they will form a part of the great closing tableau.

NOT FOR PRIVATE PROFIT.

The cost of the Exposition will be in the neighborhood of $50,000, and it has been financed by a group of wealthy men in Cincinnati, who have advanced the funds required to pay all bills promptly as they become due. This group of men includes some of the most prominent citizens of Cincinnati. It is expected that the Exposition will not only pay its running expenses, but enable the men who subscribed to the guarantee fund to be repaid with interest at 8 per cent per annum on the sums which they have advanced. Should a profit remain, it will be turned over to the Missionary Education Movement for the furtherance of missionary education.

Women!
If weak, you need Cardui, the woman's tonic. Cardui is made from gentle herbs, acts in a natural manner, and has no bad results, as some of the strong drugs sometimes used. As a medicine—a tonic—for weak, tired, worn-out women, Cardui has been a popular success for over 50 years.

Take CARDUI
The Woman's Tonic
Mrs. Lula Walden, of Gramlin, S. C., followed this advice. Read her letter: "I was so weak, when I first began to take Cardui, that it tired me to walk just a little. Now, I can do all the general housework for a family of 9." Try Cardui for your troubles. It may be the very remedy you need.

Last Sunday as Lystra Smith was returning from Aurora, the horse he was driving became unmanageable and he was running when a short distance from the ferry and when he came to what is known as the big slough, some part of the harness broke and let the shafts fall to the ground, turning the buggy over and throwing Mr. Smith out on his head, rendering him unconscious, where he was found by John Klopp, a few minutes later. Others came to the rescue in a short time and the injured man was placed in another buggy and hurried to the office of Dr. Grant and Blackburn in Petersburg, where he was restored to consciousness and his wounds were dressed, after which he was taken to his home. He was pretty badly cut and bruised about the head and face, but later developments have proven that he is not seriously hurt and baring complications, no serious results will follow. The buggy was completely wrecked.

PREDECESSORS OF CAPT. LUX

General Lux, General Burtinchen and Others Have Escaped From Prisons in Germany.

About a dozen prisoners from the escape of Captain Lux from his German prison can be found in the history of the Franco-German war, and a large proportion of the heroes of them lived to become famous.

A notable case was that of General (then colonel) Burtinchen, ultimately commander-in-chief of the French army, who was detained at Grandson, in the extreme east of Prussia. It is said that he put his bolster to bed instead of himself, hid in an obscure corner of the fortress until nightfall, and then, having obtained a disguise by the help of his orderly, was allowed to walk out of the main prison gate.

He crossed the frontier to Poland and returned to France by way of Austria and Italy.

General Lux was another prisoner who got out of his prison at Glogau in Silesia, on Christmas eve. He made his way in disguise through Berlin, Frankfurt and Karlsruhe to Basel, a feat which was not difficult for him, as, being an Alsatian, he spoke German quite as well as his fellow-countrymen.

Thirdly, we may note the experiences of M. Paul Deroudele, who escaped from Breslau, and it is piquant to recall that that vehement anti-Semite did not disdain to disguise himself as a Polish Jew. He was very nearly betrayed by a peasant whom he had hired to guide him into Bohemia; but he drew his knife with a ferocious gesture and the peasant changed his mind, with the result that M. Deroudele saw the final fight of the war as a sub-lieutenant of Turcos.

CHILDREN A RECENT FIND

Not Before the Nineteenth Century Were They Truthfully Portrayed in Literature.

Children were only found yesterday. Before the nineteenth century the child mind and the child heart were not supposed to have existed in them to interest the majestic adult. It is true that you find a delightful baby in Homer; that in Virgil there is the prettiest glimpse of a little girl, and up and down in the classics you may meet half a dozen other pleasant shadows of children. But they are only shadows, only at the most charming pictures. They give you much as if they were painting or sculpture—for in children's bodies art has always had interest enough—only what a child looks like, the pretty weakness, the instinct for play, the naive gesture and movement. Not till the "return to nature," not till the spirit of romance moved on the waters at the end of the eighteenth century, do you find poets beginning to tell of the thought and faith in a child's mind, the mysteries of the child's heart, the fancies that are dreams and the fancies that are visions. You may think that they have gone too far, that they read into childhood the laborious philosophy and sometimes the laborious sentimentality of the adult. But no one who loves children will deny that the best of the children in nineteenth century books have a far richer reality, a far fuller life than any that were born in early works. And some of the best are in Dickens.—London Telegraph.

An Indian Day.
In the dew-drenched sunrise, while the air was coolly cool, we went forth to ride along the river bank and beside fields of yellow mustard or dun stubble; then, on our return to the shadowed tents, a bath, breakfast, and the day's occupations; then again, in the swift dusk of evening, when furtive jackals rent the twilight stillness with wailing and demonic laughter, or the silver bark of little foxes echoed over the mist-veiled rice-fields, white under the moon, we gathered in comfortable deck chairs in a great, dim sala of the menage grece, while the faint, those oranges in the lamp-light, to tell and stories of the deaths of kinds, or listen to the Police Chota Sahib, who had a pretty, sentimental tenor, singing "The Long Indian Day."—Charles Johnston, in the Atlantic.

Some Shakespeare Statistics.
A Shakespearean enthusiast with much leisure time on his hands and a regular mania for statistics has discovered that the plays of Shakespeare contain 106,471 lines and 814,180 words. "Hamlet" is the longest play, with 5,830 lines, and the "Comedy of Errors" the shortest, with 1,777 lines. Altogether the plays contain 1,277 characters, of which 157 are females.

The longest part is that of Hamlet, who has 11,616 words to deliver. The part with the longest word in it is that of Costard in "Love's Labor's Lost," who tells Moth that he is "not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus."

Advice From Kindly Busy Body.
"Oh, my! Your house has an odor of burning milk. Don't you know how to avoid that?" asked the M. B. B. "I didn't think it was so terrible. I'm sure. Everybody has accidents of that kind," said the woman who was visiting rather irritably.
"Now it's all right, of course, I don't mind it, my dear, but next time just sprinkle some salt on the stove at once after the milk is spilled and you will avoid that unpleasant odor."

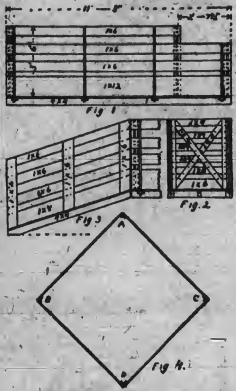

STOCK RACK AND LOADING DEVICES

Excellent for Handling Cattle, Hogs or Sheep, and New Lengths Can Be Varied.

The following is given in response to a recent inquiry for plan of a stock rack, writes F. L. Marsh in the Farm, Stock and Home. Figure 1 is a side view of a rack suitable for handling cattle, hogs or sheep. The length and height can be varied for special reason, but is about correct for general use. The bottom will serve for a wood rack, by using stronger timber. A 4x4 in. at each side and a 2x4 in. in the middle is strong enough for stock. The bottom is boarded crosswise. The sides are nailed or bolted to hardwood stakes, fitting into medium sized rack posts. Thus each side is removable.

The end gates are held by cleats and rods, as in a common wagon box. The rear end gate is shown in Fig. 2. A similar gate is placed back of the low part. The front gate should be light. A seat may be placed on the low part, resting on side-irons. The front compartment can be used for calves, or in case of a full load the middle gate can be removed. Fig. 3 shows a loading chute, placed to connect with rear end of rack. The front end may be mounted on a pair of old wheels. The height and pitch should be suited to the height of the wagon used. The bottom of chute should be cleated, so stock will not slip, and the chute should be wider at rear end.

Fig. 4 shows a paddock which can be set where most convenient, and after the stock are driven into it can be moved to the rear end of chute.

Stock Rack and Loading Devices.

Then angle A is opened to width of chute, and hooked to it. The chute need not flare, if used with the paddock. The latter should be about 12 feet on each side. At the other corners are strong hinges on 2x4's. At angles B and C the hinges are on the outside, at D on the inside. Thus the pen may be folded up, and handled by one person, or very easily by two. Large castor wheels may be placed at each corner, with two at A.

One Good Mutton Breed.
Mutton should never be of mixed breeds on one farm. Get one good mutton breed, stick to it and develop it to the highest point possible. A lot of mixed lambs never bring the highest price on the market. It is those of one breed, uniform in size, shape and condition that get the big money.

Corn a Poor Horse Feed.
It is claimed on reliable authority that corn-fed horses are more susceptible to disease than those given other grains. Corn may enter into the ration but it should not be the entire ration.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Breed for merit as well as pedigree. It is very desirable that the ewe lambs exercise daily. Rock salt for the cattle is preferable to the ordinary kind. Wire and cut worms are numerous in old meadows and pastures. Never loosen or throw out any more slugs than you want to feed immediately. Just now the heavy steer is a much sought after article in the live stock markets. The colts and unused horses should spend most of each pleasant day in the paddock. The prosperous and most successful farmer is comfortable only when his stock is comfortable.

Those who do not have a supply of alfalfa on hand will find red clover to be a satisfactory substitute. A pleasant, cheerful, fearless disposition is a valuable quality in a roadster or a general-purpose horse. Out straw that is free from mold makes an excellent winter forage for mules, young cattle and boarding horses.

Small breeders of limited means should aim to raise animals that combine size, beauty and style with speed, ability, courage and endurance. The meadows look good for pasture in the fall and early spring, but the man who keeps his cattle off of them always gets better crops of hay. A horse or a cat will do better upon a two-thirds ration of hay and one-third of straw than upon full ration of hay alone.

C. A. Glossner, 24 Ontario St., Rochester, N. Y., has recovered from a long and severe attack of kidney trouble, his cure being due to Foley Kidney Pills. After detailing his case, he says: "I am only sorry I did not learn sooner of Foley Kidney Pills. In a few days' time my backache completely left me and I felt greatly improved. My kidneys became stronger, dizzy spells left me and I was no longer annoyed at night. I feel 100 per cent better since using Foley Kidney Pills. For sale at Jones' drug store, Walton, Ky."

WILSON ANIMAL

Terrorizing Citizens of Pleasant Valley Neighborhood.

Live Stock and Dogs Seek Shelter From the Long Claws of Whatever It Is.

The citizens of Pleasant Valley neighborhood have been considerably excited for several days because of the belief that a wild animal of the most ferocious species has been prowling about that part of the county. No one has got sight of the strange and unexplained visitor, but divers and sundry persons have seen tracks which they aver are nothing like those made by any of the domestic animals in that section. They describe the imprints of the animals' feet in the snow or mud as resembling those of a dog but so much larger it can not be thought for a moment that they were made by a canine. It is evident the claws at the ends of the toes are not less than two inches in length and very sharp, as where it has crossed fences it is not uncommon to find deep gashes cut in the rails, some instances grooves being nearly half an inch deep in the hard wood.

Some of the people in the neighborhood have heard, recently, peculiar and frightful noises at night, and they can not be persuaded that it is as safe to be out at night in that locality as it is in other parts of the county.

It is said that the dogs in the neighborhood appear to understand that there is in both man and beast, and hang about the doors of their owners' houses at night and whine most pitiful and refuse to be quieted so long as they are not given permission to enter the house, and even when taken in they are restless and spring to their feet and raise their bodies if they hear a slight noise.

Getting Lively.

The contest which the Recorder sprang last week, if indications are reliable, will develop considerable interest among the young ladies of the county and their friends. It is probable that this section will present quite a number of candidates, and in which case the contest will be that much easier for the successful parties. This is the first time in the history of Boone county that any two of her young ladies have been given an opportunity to acquire such handsome and useful presents at no money but only their time and a little of their energy being required. A handsome gold watch and an elegant bedroom set are enough to prompt any young lady to an earnest effort to acquire. These presents are such as will be appreciated by any young lady, and while of every day use, they will be a source of much pleasure. Young lady, buckle on your hustling armor and go after them.

In this contest there are three in nomination this week, viz: Miss Pauline Kelly, of Burlington, and Miss Lizzie May McGlasson, of Boone county, both in section No. 1 and Miss Edith Kelly, of Hathaway, in section No. 2.

We voted that we counted the votes cast in the Boone Co. Recorder Popularity Contest to noon Wednesday March 7th, 1912, and find it as follows:

Miss Pauline Kelly, 10,500
Miss Lizzie May McGlasson, 10,500
Miss Edith Kelly, 10,500
Miss Lizzie Rogers, James A. Duncan.

Monday Sidney Gaines and wife arrived home from Florida, where they visited several of the important cities of the State. They were well pleased with the land of flowers. We sincerely thank our friends for their sympathy and assistance during the illness and death of our beloved daughter.

Resolutions of Respect.

Resolved, by the Gunpowder Baptist church:

Whereas on Feb. 13th, 1912, our Divine Creator allowed the Angel of Death to suddenly enter our midst and remove from us our beloved brother and Deacon, B. W. Adams, therefore be it Resolved, That we, in our human wisdom, fail to understand why our much loved brother should have been taken from us, yet we realize that our God is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind; therefore, with a trusting faith we leave it all to His will knowing that He doeth all things well and that He will comfort and lighten the burdens of all who trust in Him.

Resolved, That we extend to his wife, sister and relatives our heartfelt sympathy in their sad bereavement and realizing that our kindest expression of sympathy is inadequate to console, we commend them to God, whom we reverence and love and from whom cometh life beyond the grave.

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Adams the wife has been deprived of a gentle, loving husband, whose absence will be felt; the church and S. School, a loving and faithful member and Deacon; our county and community a most estimable Christian man.

Resolved, That resolutions be entered on our church book and that a copy be sent the wife and sisters of the deceased and a copy be sent to our county pastor and the Western Recorder for publication.

ANOTHER HOME MADE SAD

And Time Only Can Heal The Wounded Hearts.

Death, which has been busy among the citizens of this locality for several weeks, invaded the family circle and took from Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Conner, their youngest child, Julius, who was 12 years and two days old. The little fellow was stricken with bronchitis about three weeks before his death. The disease was followed by double pneumonia of the worst type and baffled every effort that could be made to comfort him. Nothing was left undone to restore the little fellow to his parents, but all to no avail. Julius was a bright, manly, lovable little fellow, a great favorite with all his schoolmates and little associates, each of whom was visibly affected by his death. The entire community sympathized with the bereaved parents, but only those who have had a like experience actually realize the terrible affliction which they and their other son are undergoing, and time and time only can heal their wounded hearts and lift the heavy burden of affliction that is now bearing so heavily upon them.

At 10 p. m. Tuesday the remains were conveyed by funeral director C. Scott Chambers, of Walton, to the Universalist church, where Mrs. F. O. Keys sang in a feeling manner, "Some Day We'll Understand," after which Rev. Edgar C. Riley delivered a most comforting discourse closing it with a recitation of the little boy's last prayer, which brought tears to the eyes of everyone in the large audience. Prof. Dix, Roll Dix, Johnson Northcutt and Harold Crigler sang, "Surrender All." The scenes at the church were solemn and affecting, and especially when the parting look at the little one was being taken. The following pupils of the High School bore the flowers: Margaret Hughes and Kathryn Roberts, Walter Brown and Edwin Duncan, Virgil Gaines and George Porter. The floral offerings were beautiful, among them being one "Glad to Hear of the Little Boy's Last Prayer," which was from the school the deceased had attended. The interment took place in the family lot in the Odd-Fellows cemetery.

Lake Erie fishermen are earning lots of good money this winter, and they are doing this without discomfort, says the Columbus Dispatch. They cut a small hole in the ice, drop in three or four lines, set a square house on runners, equipped with a small coal stove, cover the opening, and then sit within and pull out the fish all day long.

They say that the saloons in the vicinity of the Lexington tobacco markets are doing a land office business. That may be the reason some of the farmers who sell their crops in Lexington sometimes get home with only a fraction of the proceeds of their sales. Better sell at home and order the booze from Seabucks.—Cynthians Democrat.

Confederate's Reunion.

The presentation of crosses of honor to the veterans will be one of the most impressive ceremonies of the Confederate Reunion which will be held in Macon, Ga., May 1-5.

The men who will be honored will receive their crosses from the hands of the president of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. If the president is not changed General C. Irvine Walker, Commander-in-Chief of the veterans, his staff and W. G. Pritchard, Commanding Officer of the United Sons of Confederate Veterans, and his aides will be to the right and left of the president of the Daughters when the crosses are presented. State Regents of the Daughters will flank the veterans on the right, while the maids and sponsors of the Sons will be on their left.

Mrs. Walter Douglas Lamar, state regent of Georgia and president of Sidney Lanier Chapter, is planning to make this gathering the crowning event of the reunion, from the standpoint of the Daughters. Mrs. Lamar not only has the moral support, but to get twenty per cent more of all members of the chapter of which she is the head. All are working to make the ceremony surpass any of the same character ever held. An announcement has not yet been made as to where the meeting will be held. Mrs. Lamar and the committee of ladies working with her have several places under consideration and will decide this question at an early date.

How To Milk Cows.

There is a vast difference in milkers. Mr. Stockwell of the dairy department of the Oregon Agricultural College, has the following sensible suggestion on this subject. He says:

"There is an immense difference in milkers. One milker may be able to get twenty per cent more milk than another.

"The milker should not be allowed to excite or worry the cow by loud talking or abuse of any kind. A cow should be milked quietly and quickly. As she is largely a creature of habit, special care should be taken to get all the milkings the same. The milk drawn may contain as little as one per cent of fat, while the last runs from six to ten per cent.

"In milking the whole hand should be used, closing first that part next to the udder. Then the milk is forced past the spincter muscle by closing the remainder of the hand. The cow's teats should always be dry when milked. Wetting the teats is not only a dirty, filthy habit, but it also allows the teats to chap and become sore and red and inflamed. If there is difficulty in milking a cow dry, a small amount of vaseline may be rubbed on the hands; it is beneficial rather than harmful, both in a sanitary way and in its effects on the teats.

Pasturing the Calves.

Calves reared in winter will be old enough for turning out the following spring. But what about turning out? What sort of pasture land has each individual reared? Some farmers have land suitable, but on many other farms, other than strictly grazing or feeding-land farms, the pastures are so poor that calves turned out in such a blooming condition, as they should be after a liberal bringing up, would melt like butter in the sun. This, of course, would never do. With the pasture land farm of such description there is generally a proportion of light plowed land on which might be grown a succession of green feed, which, in connection with a supply of mangles, which would have been saved over, will keep the youngsters going thru the summer with this management not only will a full supply of good feed be insured, but the animals will rest better than if turned out and worried during the hottest of the summer months by the flies. If it is thought desirable, the animals may be turned into an adjacent pasture at night time as a change, without value, considering the food they get at the pasture. The actual feeding will not have begun at this time, but a certain amount of dry food will be necessary to keep the young animals.

A Missouri exchange says: "It is said that the mortality among the hogs was not caused by cholera, but from a white worm that gets in the nose. A prominent hog raiser who has been experimenting with his hogs says that turpentine and lard applied freely to the inside of the hogs nose will bring sure relief. Most of the farmers about here who have lost hogs say that the disease does not resemble cholera, but none know what causes the hogs to die. If turpentine and lard will save them, it is a cheap remedy, if it fails you haven't lost anything and it is at least worth a trial."

The Men Who Suffered as heads of large enterprises are men of great energy. Success to-day demands health. To all it is to fail. It's utter folly for a man to endure a week in a half all condition when Electric Bitters will put him right on his feet in short order. "Four bottles did me more good than any other medicine I ever took," writes Chas. B. Allen, Sylvania, Ga. "After years of suffering with rheumatism, liver trouble, stomach disorders and deranged kidneys, I am again thanks to Electric Bitters, sound and well." Try them. Only 50c at all dealers.

The turpikes will be in very bad condition when they thaw out.

Explains Itself.

Capt. Marcus Collins, of Wynne, Arkansas, the remains of whose parents and those of several others of his relatives repose just north of town, in the old cemetery, has placed in the hands of Mrs. Laura Martin a subscription paper of which the following is a copy and is self explanatory. With the gold mine as valuable as he believes it will prove, his proposition would be a great thing for the old cemetery:

"We the undersigned hereby subscribe the amount of money or deposits or other valuable names for the purpose of purchasing Two Thousand shares of the capital stock of the Boone Mining Company, Prescott, Arizona. The said subscription is made upon the following conditions: that the total amount subscribed shall be $200; that Captain Marcus Collins shall in addition subscribe and donate two thousand shares of said stock. The stock to be purchased, subscribed and donated shall be held by three trustees to be appointed by the Judge of the Boone County Court, Kentucky, who shall have the right, power and it shall be their duty to use the income from said stock for the purpose of building any and all necessary fencing, sodding all graves and keeping the old cemetery just north of Burlington, Boone County, Kentucky, in the best condition. The said cemetery is bounded on the East by the North Bend road on the north by the Boone County Court House on the west by the lands of J. S. Hogan and on the south by the old Morgan Academy lot. The said trustees shall first enclose the cemetery with a first class fence constructed of concrete and iron, concrete base with an iron fence on top, new post in condition all graves and keep the whole cemetery in good condition; after said fence has been built and the entire cemetery put in good condition and after paying all expenses of same, and of maintaining the cemetery should there be any additions in the hands of said trustees they are authorized and directed to spend same for the benefit of the poor in this vicinity which shall be done about December 20th of each year.

The first trustees shall be appointed for one, two and three years respectively after which each trustee shall hold his office for three years and in case a vacancy shall occur the appointment shall be made for the remainder of the term. The trustee shall hold and exercise their powers until their successors shall have been appointed. The trustees shall not receive any salary or compensation for the service they shall render, and they shall keep this writing in a safe and secure place and deliver same to their successors.

Lawrenceburg, Ind. News Items.

(From Lawrenceburg Press.) Oliver Grubbs has sold about fifty acres of his farm in Harrison township to Benjamin Perkins for $2,000.

Three horses froze to death in the bottoms between Lawrenceburg and Elizabethtown during the recent severe cold spell.

The Purdue agriculture exhibit car arrived as scheduled, last Thursday evening and was open to the public Friday morning until 10 o'clock. The attendance of farmers was very small, only a few arriving in time to see the exhibit. The scarcity of visitors was due to the disagreeable weather and to the fact that the car was here so short a time it leaving before the farmers could get their work done and get to town.

The smallpox situation is reported by the physicians of the city to be well under control at present. There have been no new cases for some time and a strict quarantine is being maintained. The health officers expect no further spread of the disease outside of the families to which it is at present confined. There are twenty cases reported at present and seven hundred houses under quarantine. All patients are doing well and none have the disease in a malignant form.

(From Lawrenceburg Register.) Furnace Aylor had an eye put out by being struck by a nail he was driving while working at the carriage factory on Tuesday morning.

Sherwood Blasdel, of the Miller township, gave birth to four lambs. This is an unusual occurrence. We have heard of ewes giving birth to three lambs but never of four.

R. W. Clark, the Walnut street jeweler, has purchased of Mrs. A. Schneider, the business building No. 11 and 13 East High street, the former occupied by Bryant Sisters millinery. Mr. Clark is making extensive interior improvements in No. 13 and will occupy the same May 1st with his jewelry stock.

TEN YEAR POOL

Burley Society's Project Assured of Success.

Twenty-Nine Counties Report 185,289 Acres Pledged.

Authority Given to Build Factory and Warehouse.

Lexington, March 5.—Returns received from twenty-nine counties out of forty-six in the Burley district give a total of 185,289 acres pledged to the new ten-year pool of the Burley Tobacco Society. It is believed that the returns from the other counties will bring this total up to 175,000 or 200,000 acres. There were representatives of 30 counties present, but E. S. Head, of Oldham, reported no tobacco pooled in this county. The district board of the society held a meeting here today to receive the pool, which closed last Friday, and much enthusiasm was shown over the showing made, which was much larger than had been anticipated. It was expected that probably not more than 100,000 acres would be pledged. The result was declared to mean the unqualified success of the project. President LeBus declared he would recommend that from 100 to 200 acres of land be purchased and that tractors and switches be supplied to accommodate the factory and loose-leaf warehouses to locate near Lexington.

He said the location should be on a suitable railroad connection and in reasonable proximity to the Lexington belt line. The Executive Committee was authorized to go ahead and purchase a site and build and equip the manufactory. In voting on the question of giving the Executive Committee this power the roll was called, and there were but two opposing votes—James R. Ramsey of Carroll county, and P. S. Head, of Oldham. Mr. Ramsey explained that he was for the factory proposition, but some of his people were not. Mr. Head opposed the motion on practically the same grounds.

The acreage pledged is expected to give the society 20 to thirty million pounds of tobacco to be manufactured each year from the total of about 200,000 pounds which is the normal crop produced annually.

Resolutions of Respect.

Resolutions of Respect from Alline Lodge No. 19, Grant, Ky.

Whereas it has pleased God, the Father of all, who knoweth and doeth all things best, to remove from our midst our beloved brother, Thomas J. Walton, who departed this life February 28, 1912, after a lingering illness, therefore be it

Resolved, That in his death Alline Lodge No. 19 has lost a true and faithful brother; the community, a tried and useful citizen; the church, a beloved brother; his family, a kind and devoted husband and father.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere sympathy to the bereaved family and bid them take hope and consolation in the heavenly assurance that they will meet him where there is no sorrow and no death, but eternal happiness and love.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be retained in the record of this Lodge, a copy be presented to the family of the deceased and another be presented to the Boone County Recorder for publication. Clere, John Smith, Jr., Robert W. Rice.

While it drives many a man insane trying to make both ends meet, there is some consolation in the fact that it is much cheaper for an insane person to live than the same man. It costs the state of Indiana an average of 89 cents a day to care for its insane patients in the various hospitals, in the state for the three months ended December 31, 1911, and the total of expenses for the quarter, including permanent improvements at the institutions, was $288,295.57.

Assuming that he had jurisdiction in the matter Judge Charles Kern, in the Fayette circuit court today, will grant the temporary restraining order and granted the prayer of the defendants for an appeal with the order that the appeal can be taken before a member of the Court of Appeals without the record being copied. From Female Helped in Peking in 1801 All Chinese Lip Dogs in the West Are Descended.

The history of the Salimian, which disappeared from the Turkish treasury in the reign of Sultan Abdul Hamid, is believed to have been sold to some dealer in antiquities in London or Paris. Tahir Pasha, to whom the sword was given by Abdul just before the latter was deposed, has told the Constantinople police that it was buried in a subterranean passage in the Yildiz Kiosk, but he has forgotten the exact place.

Tahir was a favorite of Abdul, and the story is that Tahir received the sword from Abdul, although it belonged to the state, as a reward for espionage. When the constitutional government supplanted Abdul Hamid a fruitless search for the sword was made. Recently the war minister received an anonymous letter saying that the sword was in Tahir Pasha's possession. This led to a search of Tahir's house. Following Tahir's statement that the sword is hidden in the Yildiz Kiosk excavations are being made in that place. The police doubt Tahir's story.

The sword of Suleiman the Magnificent was one of the most valuable relics in the possession of the Turkish government. Following a little while the had, Abdul Hamid added it to the collection of priceless works of art and jewelry in the "golden cage" of the Yildiz Kiosk.

CHILDHOOD'S OATH IN COURT

"Cross My Heart and Hope to Die," Causes Merriment in Atlanta Hall of Justice.

That childhood oaths are dearer to her than that prescribed by the code of Georgia, and carry more meaning than any set form used in criminal courts, was shown by Miss McCall, a pretty and attractive young woman who was called to the witness stand in the Fulton superior court.

The prosecuting attorney was endeavoring to confuse her on cross-examination, and was endeavoring to impress upon her the fact that she could not possibly remember a seemingly unimportant incident which happened on December 25, 1911.

"Are you sure of that?" he queried, gazing at her sternly.

"Yes, sir," she answered positively, smiling and showing an attractive line of white teeth.

"But will you swear to it?" he asked. "Remember an oath is a solemn thing."

"Hold up my right hand and cross my heart," she earnestly answered, and then gazed around in mild astonishment at the outburst of merriment which rippled across the court room carrying many back to their younger days, when "Cross my heart and hope to die" was the most solemn of all oaths.—Atlanta Constitution.

Indian Turned the Joke.

The death of Chief Saucy Calf of the Osages at Pawhuska, Okla., and the suspicious circumstances surrounding his sudden departure for the happy hunting ground recalls a story they tell at Pawhuska on the chief. The greatest honor an Osage can confer on a friend is to trade names with him. "Sassy" Calf being of genial nature, traded names with half the male residents of Pawhuska. He did most of his trading at the McLaughlin-Farrar store, where he always greeted the senior partner with "How Sassy Calf?" McLaughlin always replied, "Hello, Mac." One day Sassy Calf appropriated McLaughlin's office chair and cocked his feet on the merchant's desk. McLaughlin entered and said jocularly: "Hello, Mac, I want to get $5 worth of bacon and charge it to me." "Nuthin' doin, Sassy Calf," rejoined the chief without a smile.

Honor of College Students.

Abuses of liberty, as well as nearly all other college delinquencies, can be largely prevented by a consistent appeal to the undergraduate's sense of honor, according to Clayton Sedgwick Cooper, writing in The Century. "The American Undergraduate," he writes. "Recently," adds Mr. Cooper, "I asked the president of a North Carolina college what he regarded as the chief characteristic of American students. He replied promptly, 'College honor.' At Princeton, at the University of Virginia, at Amherst and at many other institutions the honor system in examinations, arranged and managed by students, represents the deliberate intention of the undergraduates to do the square thing. These laws, which the students voluntarily impose upon themselves, are enforced more vigorously than the rules of the faculty."

Proposed New Word.

But a few score words in the English language begin with the letter "x." The suggestion that a new word, "xerularia," be admitted to their sacred ranks is therefore an undertaking of some timidity. Dr. H. F. Roberts proposes it in Science, to replace "the clumsy and rather ill-sounding compound, 'drought-resistance.'" The second half of the new word is from the Greek "alexais," which implies a keeping off or resistance, and is related to the latter part of the Greek derivative, "prophylaxis."

A Warning.

"That man has a screw loose." "Well, do you think you can mend matters by making him tight?"

Peking dogs, as they formerly were called—otherwise, Chinese lip dogs—have a curious history. On October 3, 1861, an Anglo-French soldier ransacked the imperial summer palace at Peking and took back to his captain a little dog that was supposed to have belonged to the empress. At any rate, her majesty made frantic attempts to regain the little creature, and the English officer finally struck a bargain, through Chinese emissaries, that it be sent as a present from the Chinese ruler to her majesty, Queen Victoria of England.

Good feeling was thus established all around, and the little dog, bearing the name of Looty, was domiciled at Buckingham palace. He was a very lonely little creature, the other dogs taking exception to his oriental habits and appearance, and when the prince and princess of Wales returned from a continental trip the latter pleaded with her mother-in-law to be allowed to take Looty to Sandringham. About six months later Looty's mate arrived from China, and the breeding of this species of dog became a diversion in fashionable society.

Not many years ago a number of ladies got together material for a dog show and called it an "Association of the Dogs From the Palace of Peking." Looty, who had long since passed to the future good or evil place for dogs, was represented by a very numerous progeny. From Looty, indeed, all Chinese dogs known to Europe and America are descended.—Harper's Weekly.

COOKED EGGS ON FLATIRON

With the Gas Stove Frozen Up, New Yorker Proved Himself Equal to the Emergency.

The prolonged cold spell this winter sharpened the wits of many persons who never before had any idea of the uses to which electricity could be put. When the gas gave out in cooking stoves owing to the pipes being frozen—as it did in hundreds of houses—there was a rush for electric cooking utensils.

But sometimes the emergency arose when it was not possible to buy such things in time. One such case occurred at breakfast time and left the family with nothing on which to cook eggs. The master of the house knew they had an electric flatiron. He told them to invert it and cook the eggs on its polished undersurface, which was done without difficulty. Small pancakes and toast were cooked in the same way.

Another resourceful man used a flatiron to thaw out a frozen radiator, while another, in order to make his radiator more efficient and stir up the stagnant air in a room, placed an electric fan on the floor and directed a blast of air against the radiator. The effect of this was to raise the temperature of the room 25 degrees in half an hour.

Her Reward.

The cook for a well-known Seattle family left, and no other could be obtained, so the lady of the house did the cooking herself, with such satisfactory results that, after a month, her husband gave her a beautiful set of saucers as a token of his appreciation of the good dinners he had enjoyed.

Of course the neighbors soon heard of this, and when the cook left in an equally well-known family the lady of that house said to her husband:

"Well, the cook has gone and I'm not going to bother to get another. I'm going to do the cooking myself, deary. You heard what Mr. So-and-So gave his wife when she did the cooking?"

And, putting her arms round his neck, she cooed: "What shall I get for my cooking?"

"Woman," said her husband, pushing her away, "you will get a long, black veil!"—Saturday Evening Post.

In the Profesh.

A negro very fat and well along in years, sauntered into the lobby of a Broadway theater the other day and asked for the manager.

"What can I do for you, mammy?" asked the manager.

"I want a ticket into the gallery, boss," she replied calmly.

"But why should I give you a ticket?"

"Cos I'm a retired actress."

"You? What did you do?" inquired the other in amusement.

"I played in 'Antony and Cleopatra.' I was fan-bearer for Miss Fanny Davenport."

One Good-Deed to Her Record.

Tai An, the late empress of China, has not always been regarded as a model of the gentler virtues, and yet there is a story to the effect that each year on her birthday she was in the habit of buying from her own private purse 10,000 captive birds and setting them free, praying to the gods as she opened each cage that they might not be caught again.

At the Flower Ball.

The Snapdragon looked indignantly across the room.

"Johnny-Jump-Up," she called, "go over to that Clinging Vine corner and tell one of those Suckers to get Sweet William away from those Wall-flowers."

Negroes are numerous in the departments at Washington. Many of them have rendered long service for distinguished public men and their families. They are employed as doorkeepers or messengers to members of the cabinet or their assistants. The interior department has three colored men who have long seen service in public life. One of them was a body servant of Robert E. Lee before the Civil War. Another served as driver for Mrs. John A. Logan for ten years. The latest recruit, John Washington, was a coachman for President Roosevelt in the last two years of his administration.

Senator Berkshire and Representative Carroll did not vote alike on all measures, showing that each was voting as he thought for the best interest of the public.

Gov. McCreary and the legislature got along very nicely, but the Governor is noted for his pleasant his relations with those with whom he is associated in business.

The President and the ex-President are beginning to get hot under the collar, and indications are the G. O. P. is in what will prove its hottest campaign years. Some uncomplimentary, and almost unparliamentary, remarks have already been made.

The Kentucky legislature that adjourned last Tuesday has quite liberal in making appropriations but the wave of progress that is sweeping the State and country is calculated to turn lawmaking bodies into path beaters known to them. It is hoped however, that the Kentucky Solons were able to distinguish between real progress and extravagance and confined their liberality strictly to the requirements of the former.

The Kentucky General Assembly shut up last night, and the members packed their grips and departed for their homes last Tuesday. The body did a large amount of business, the most of which it is believed will prove beneficial to the State. One thing it did was to enact a compulsory primary election law, which, if enforced, will just about put the State politicians out of business.

What are we to do to better our country? People are leaving almost every day from Estill, going where there are better roads more work and where they can live easier. Then let us go to work, build better roads, which will enhance the value of our farms, build better schoolhouses and increase the school term from six months to eight, then people will come from other counties to locate in Estill instead of our good citizens locating elsewhere. —Spout Spring Cor. Irvine Herald.

Don't go "crazy wild" over the present price of tobacco. The price is much below what the average should be. Considering the high price of everything else the normal average for tobacco should be 15 cents to 20 cents. Tobacco at the present general average about 10 cents is no higher than it was at 6 cents in 1908. Of course, you get more money, but it takes more to live. About the only person really helped by the advance is the man who owed a debt contracted when prices were low simply because the debt has not increased with the increase of tobacco prices. —Dover News.

Casey county has one of the most remarkable families in the State. This family lives on the big South fork, near Powers. It is comprised of six members and five generations, all living in the same house. Their names are as follows: Mrs. Eliza Haffey, great great grandmother; Mrs. Sara Mills, great grandmother Mrs. Mollie Murphy, grandmother; Robt. and Grace Taylor, parents of one son, Clifton Bradley. The first three named women are widows, two of whom only had one child each, while Mrs. Murphy has had three, two of whom still survive. Charley, a son of three years, is the sixth one of the family. The oldest member is 78 years of age, the youngest one month. —Liberty News.

The beautiful weather we had last week for burning tobacco-podded beds rendered us of the possibilities of Cumberland county in regard to a crop of tobacco this year at the present high prices. We were informed by our good friend Mr. J. U. Curtis that he recently sold on the Glasgow loose leaf market the red burley tobacco raised on one acre of ground for $350. The top price paid for his best was $36.50 per hundred, which broke all records at Glasgow up till that time. On Wednesday of last week Mr. Harrison Dewberry sold his burley on the same market for $37.50 per hundred, again breaking all records. What Mr. Curtis and Mr. Dewberry did the balance of our farmers can do. —Burkesville Banner.

A very fair increase in the volume of leaf tobacco exported from the United States is recorded for the opening months of the year 1912, the total quantity of the natural leaf and stems and blemishes having been shipped abroad in greater quantity than the corresponding month last year. Exports of cigars also have increased foreign demand for the first month of the current year, while plug tobacco remains in the gain. The only tobacco manufacturers to report a decrease for the month of the new year is the American Tobacco Co., and this may be partially due, at least, to the enormous increase in the domestic demand which is taxing the capacity of the factories from month to month.

School Emphasizes Necessity of Careful Selection.

Several farmers have, since the announcement made in the Recorder a few weeks ago. It is hoped that many others have taken warning and are testing their own seed. At the present writing four tests have been completed and reported to the parties sending in the seed. The total number of ears in these tests was 81. The percentage of grains germinating was 71.2 per cent. By throwing out 23 of the poorest germinating ears the per cent is raised to 89.5. By throwing out 50 ears the 41 remaining ears will germinate perfectly. The lowest percentage of vitality shown by any one collection was 46.2 per cent, the highest was 83.3 per cent. These figures not only show that the corn this year has a very low average of vitality but they show also what may be done to increase the average by careful selection. The tests made thus far show a decidedly higher vitality in yellow than in white corn. The 19 ears of white corn show an average of 57.1. The 78 ears of yellow corn show 80 per cent. One man sent in six ears of each kind all raised and cared for under the same condition. The six ears of yellow showed a vitality of 100 per cent, the six of white showed 26 per cent. A test of clover seed showed 16 per cent vitality. One of timothy showed 66 per cent. The High School renews its invitation to farmers to send in their seed to be tested.

Test All Seed Corn.

Farmers should be alive to the question of Good Seed Corn. The 1911 crop is poorest in quality ever grown. It is low in vitality and of very weak germ. The St. Louis Grain Club is alarmed over the seed corn situation and urges the use of this simple, out thoroughly reliable testing method. A few cents will find it, and find it interesting as well as educational. Use a piece of cheap domestic, a four or wheat sack, or old table cloth, about 36 inches long and 12 inches wide. This is size for testing six ears of corn, and is enough to plant one-half acre. Wet cloth and wring thoroughly dry. Take two grains from tip two from center and two from the butt of the ear and place in proper square. Turn up the lower third of cloth, so as to hold seed firmly in place and prevent mixing. Roll this around a well moistened corn cob, or cloth about four inches wide and long enough to make a compact roll one and one-half to two inches thick. Then bury in a bucket or box of damp sawdust or sand and place in a moderately warm place for five days. Its condition then will determine the advisability of using the corn for seed. Use your common sense. You know vigorous root and stalk sprouts. Take no chances on weak vitality. This is one of several processes. State Agricultural Colleges also tell how to test, but the method is immaterial. The point The St. Louis Grain Club emphasizes is that all seed corn should be tested in some manner, and none is simpler than ours.

Rapid Destruction Guns.

Every since men began to kill each other with guns, and after selfish interests began to clash, a good share of their leisure time has been devoted to the elevating of inventing instruments for quick killing. Only a few years since the smoke of black powder was done away with, and comparatively a matter of days since Maxim produced his soundless, flame suppressing device. And now comes news from Sweden that an inventor there has found means, at last, to stop the kick which has made sore shoulders from the time the first blunderbuss was discharged, and has constructed a weapon that will drop men so fast as a single marksman may dispose of a regiment in an hour. Eleven hundred and twenty-five shots to the hour from a gun that is carried by the shooter and fired from the shoulder is a high record. Cruel, cruel! What is more cruel and brutal than human beings? The idea of men devoting their entire time and talent to inventing something that will destroy life and property in the most rapid manner possible, all for a paltry, earthly possession. Shame! To shoot eleven hundred and twenty-five leaden bullets per hour into the hearts of men is a crime that beggars description, and the inventor no doubt gloats over his achievement. And the war departments of all countries eager to install these death machines, shame! Why is not the time and talent of men directed to the invention of an instrument that will fire eleven hundred and twenty-five kind words and words of encouragement per hour into the hearts of men, women and children? Why is there not an instrument of device invented that will prevent the kick from the powerful and scornful? The oppressed and discouraged would welcome an invention of this nature. The intense heart-aches of many could be relieved by just one kind word or a word of encouragement by those who are in a position to give it. Try the weapon of kindness upon your fellow-being instead of the weapon of destruction! —Ex.

FOR SALE BEES—28 colonies of bees with all fixtures. Apply to J. G. Crisler, Walton, Ky.

A prominent member of Congress went to sleep on the floor of the House of Representatives, and suddenly awakening, convulsed the assemblage by loudly demanding, "Where am I at?" As far back as history goes man has always asked this question, "where am I at?" As I look back over the past and then to the present age and see the tendency of the times, I suddenly exclaim where am I.

Generations have come and gone since the civil war. Babies in arms were carried by fond mothers to see the soldiers marching to and fro in our towns. These babies have grown into men and grandfathers, possibly, with whitened hair and the brows facing, looking calmly to the tendency of the times. He sees his children and grandchildren forming corn clubs. He sees his boys on a single acre now raise a hundred bushels of corn, where, formerly their father raised forty to fifty bushels. The corn club idea is to breed corn of the highest possible efficiency, and make two ears of corn grow where there was only one before. Through the selection of seed the increase will be fully thirty per cent in our county. At fourteen years of age I raised seven bushels of corn which is known as fourteen hills square. I only used the regular run of ears. At our old Boone fair I received the first prize for the best half bushel of seed. To this and our county fairs should offer prizes for the best ear of corn raised by a boy not over twelve years old. The idea is to interest boys in the possibilities of scientific agriculture. The boy will become interested at once in selecting the seed, and will become a scientist without knowing it. To this end agriculture should be taught in all our public schools. Go into your village postoffice any evening and see your boys and girls, and note their greedy grab for the daily papers, and observe how interested they are in the tendency of the times. Those are the boys and girls who can carry a message to Garcia, while their fathers, with whitened hair and furrowed faces, are watching the tendency of the times. R. E. Souther, Florence, Ky.

Pruning Grape Vines.

One of our subscribers was in our office recently to inquire what was the trouble with his grape vines. When asked if he pruned the vines regularly he answered that he did not because he wanted the vines to spread over the arbor and make shade. It is impossible to raise good grapes and vines together. To get the maximum yield of fruit, of the best quality, the force of strength that would otherwise go to producing new vines should be directed to the grapes by pruning the vines. The fruit is borne upon the shoots which grow from buds formed the previous season. The one-year-old canes are the bearing wood. In pruning the old wood must be cut fairly low and short as the root cannot support, successfully, too many branches that bear fruit. There are several methods of pruning but the one that is most commonly practiced among the farmers of this state is to cut the one-year-old shoots back to two or three buds. In this way there are fewer buds, perhaps, but the ones that are produced are of larger size and better quality than if more buds were left. Grapes should be pruned early in the spring before the sap begins to rise. They should never be pruned when the vines are frozen. If allowed to grow too long in the spring before pruning the sap will be running and whenever a shoot is cut the sap will weep and be wasted. This is called bleeding. —Indiana Farmer.

Carrollton News.

Over half million pounds of tobacco were sold at the two Carrollton tobacco leaf sales warehouse the past week ending Wednesday, and tobacco continues to come from all directions. As a general thing the quality was of the poorer type, but the general averages were not so high. Nearly all of last week's non-descripts were neglected and sold as low as $1, but this week the market is stronger on these grades and nothing was sold under $3, and the fine leaf continues to bring the best prices of any market in the State. Last week all markets in the State showed a "slump." Jack Dunn aged 3 1/2 years, a little boy whom Mr. Dunn had taken to raise, secured a match on Wednesday of last week and ignited it against the stove. Fearful of being caught with the burn this match he thrust it into his little inside jacket pocket. His clothing caught on fire and his agonizing screams brought Mrs. Dunn to her room, and her hands were painfully burned in extinguishing the fire. The little fellow suffered until Thursday night when death came to his relief. He was buried at English Saturday.

A meeting of tobacco-growers was held at the court house last Saturday, and was attended by a large crowd. J. R. Ramey stated the object of the meeting was to secure signers of the Ten Year Pool, and the subject was liberally discussed, but no single signature was obtained for the pool.

Tobacco sold at Shelbyville last week for the unheard-of price of 79 cents per pound. When a farmer can get 79 cents for tobacco then he has no right to grumble because Johnny Rockefeller tries to imitate his example. Newspaper men and other business men may feel that Rockefeller is getting too rich, but the farmer who sells tobacco at nearly a dollar a pound ought to sympathize with Johnny Rock in his feeble attempts to do well.—Hartford Herald.

Quite a large crowd attended the sale of the personal estate of the late Ellen Snyder, last Saturday, and good prices prevailed. Old time counterpane from $7.50 to $3 a piece and many other articles proportionately brought high prices. W. W. Burkett, of Union, was the orator. A very appetizing lunch of chicken soup and ham sandwiches was served, for which the chilly day had made robust appetites. Thomas Summers, the administrator is well pleased with the sale.

"The old woman." A nice phrase to be used about the dear old soul who kept her vigil over you over you in your infancy, kissed away your tears in childhood and reminding your trusted friend in maturity. Is this all the love you have for the silver haired mother who bathed your scorching brow all through the long sleepless nights of affliction when your brain was wild with burning fever? Is there no other term you can find for her whose love has followed you through every trial, tribulation and misfortune of life? Has mother, through all these years of labor, watching and waiting, been wasting her love on a worthless bunch of clay, who, in the rosy dawn of manhood has no other term more fitting than "the old woman" by which to address or speak of his mother.—Lafayette Star.

Story With a Moral.

A man who was too economical to subscribe for the Recorder sent his little boy to borrow a copy from his neighbor. In his haste the boy ran over a $4.00 stand of bees and in 10 minutes looked like a warty summer squash. His father, who ran to his assistance, and failing to notice a barbed-wire fence, ran into that, cutting a handful of flesh from anatomy and ruining a $4 pair of pants. The old cow took advantage of the gap in the fence and got into the corn field and killed herself eating green corn. Hearing a rattle, the wife ran out, up to a four-gallon churn full of rich cream into a basket of little chickens drowning the entire hatch. In her haste she dropped a $3 set of false teeth. The baby having been left alone, crawled through the spilled milk and in to the parlor, where it landed on a new $30 carpet. During the excitement the oldest daughter ran away with the hired man, the dog broke up 11 setting hens and the cat ate out and chewed the tails off four fine shirts on the clothes-line. (Now is the time to subscribe.)

The Poultry Yard.

Keep a little gas-tar on hand and apply it for scaly legs.

You can tell a laying hen as far as you can see her. Her comb is always bright and healthy looking.

February hatched chicks are apt to molt in the fall, and will not be worth anything for egg production in winter.

Turkeys more than any other poultry seem to require fresh air. They will roost in the trees during a snowstorm and not seem to mind it a bit.

Forcing laying hens with stimulants of any kind, except those nature supplies in good food is a dangerous and costly process in the long run.

Soak stale bread in sweet skim-milk, press out the milk as completely as possible, and feed the chicks. Also keep coarse sand before them; without it the chicks cannot grind their food.

Put some oats in a box that will not leak; wet them thoroughly with warm water, cover them well, let them stand one whole day, then turn them into a box that does not leak. Keep putting warm water on them at morning and night till sprouts are well started. Spread them out thinly, moisten more, and keep required length. Some folks let them grow a foot long. No fine feast for the birds than oat sprouts.

Hens will soon be bringing good prices, and the high price will tempt many farmers to sell their hens off too closely. It will pay the average farmer to keep a goodly number of hens the year around. When hatching time comes, if incubators and brooders are not used, it takes several hens to do the work of hatching and rearing the chicks, and we like to have enough others to keep the egg basket filled. Eggs to sell every week means a small bill at the grocery. Can't have the eggs unless we hold on to enough hens.—From Feb. Farm Journal.

Mr. Stephens, of Covington, and F. W. Kaasbaum, of Aurora, both dealers in monuments and other grave marks, were callers at this office yesterday. They sold no goods here.

Our farmers grow and kick about their taxes being so high, and we admit that they are pretty heavy, but the greatest and most unnecessary expense the farmers of Trigg county have to bear is bad roads.—Cadiz Record.

It is only a question of how deep the mud is. Dr. Collins argues that the only way to make good roads in this country is to catch the roads in their present plight and apply cement. This one he says the rest would take care of itself.—Whitesburg Eagle.

Whether the Bosworth bill will be passed by the House and become a law we are not positive, but if you don't believe there needs to be some action toward better roads in the county and State, just take a survey once and you will be convinced that we need better roads.—Hardinsburg Leader.

Those doing hauling over the public roads should take into consideration the soft condition of the roads and load their wagons accordingly. One heavily loaded wagon can do more damage to a pike during a thaw than the ton on that wagon that will amount to in five years. It is frequently done unthoughtfully by men who are willing to go their length for good roads. Stop and scrape on dirt roads if any more.—Milton News.

Probably never since there were roads in Boyd county were the public highways in such terrible bad condition as they are in just now. The present condition is just what will be each and every winter and spring, so long as no hard roads are constructed and it does seem that it is high time that the people should learn that the digging and plowing and scraping on dirt roads is simply throwing away the money paid by the taxpayers for road improvement.—Cattlesburg Tribune.

Political Development.

By long odds the most interesting political development of years was the announcement of Theodore Roosevelt for the Presidency, which came this week. Although long expected by many, it was doubted by some, and for more than a year intense interest has been manifested in what course the "Babe of Sagamore" would take.

In reading papers from the length and breadth of the country, and from other sources, we can't say that Mr. Roosevelt's announcement was received with the same spirit of ardor and enthusiasm which has characterized the reception of his utterance upon vital questions in the past. It seems as if the country had already discounted his entry in the race—was prepared for it—and furthermore believed that Mr. Roosevelt's mind had been firm for many months in the intent to run and that he was but waiting for the psychological moment to "decide" and give the answer to the American people. Roosevelt has always been accused of being a player to the grandstand and his latest cognomen being "P. T. Barnum of American politics" and there is a strong intimation that he lived up to his reputation in his latest incident. Paying just enough attention to the entreaties of his friends to become a candidate to flatter them by his interest into greater efforts to induce him to run, but, believing as we do, that he always had a fixed purpose to become a candidate, he makes a great play to the galleries in answering the appeal from seven Governors and poses as a martyr for his country, sacrificing his personal feelings on the altar of public duty. There has been a time when it was believed that Mr. Roosevelt was invincible, but such is not the case now. Should he be nominated—and he believes he must go on record as either favoring or condemning President Taft's tariff policy including the vote of wool bill passed by the Democratic house. Should he condemn it and we believe he really does, a large per cent. of the stand pat Republicanism will wander away from his support. Should he favor it, the independent element of the country's vote would flock to the Democratic nominee, especially if he should be Woodrow Wilson. Mr. Roosevelt may meet his Waterloo at Chicago, but if not it will come from forty-eight states in November.—Elizabethtown News.

Don't Like the Pension Law.

Hon. J. Estlin Keller, a prominent ex-Confederate of Franklin county has issued a note to his comrades calling on them to repudiate the bill just passed by the legislature pensioning indigent Confederate soldiers. He claims according to the bill that you not only declare yourself to be a pauper and not able to earn a living, but you must get two physicians to make affidavit to the fact, then you must go into court and declare yourself to be a pauper, and you must prove it to be a fact to the satisfaction of the court. That you must swear that you are not possessed of as much as $500 worth of property and that you have not an annual income to exceed $300—and that you, an old man from seventy to ninety years old, are not able to earn a living by your own labor, that you have not a wife, who is able to support you, and that you are not receiving from the Federal Government a pension for service in the Spanish American War or in pacifying the Philippines or for defending the helpless orphans and children of the war against the savage Indian, but that you are a real genuine good-for-nothing old pauper in every sense of the word.

The Men Who Succeeded as heads of large enterprises are men of great energy. Success is to fail. It's utter folly for a man to endure a weak, run-down half alive condition when Electric Bitters will put him right on his feet in short order. "Four bottles did me more-real good than any other medicine I ever took," writes Chas. B. Allen, Sylvania, Ga. "After years of suffering with rheumatism, liver trouble, stomach disorders and deranged kidneys, I am again thanks to Electric Bitters, sound and well." Try them. Only 50c at all dealers.

Mr. J. W. Adams of White's Station, made the editor a gift of a half dozen apples which were as sound as a dollar. Mr. Adams has fallen upon a novel way of keeping his apples thru the coldest winter weather. He puts them in barrels and places the barrels in a good place in his garden—throwing loose dirt up around them and covering them over the top to a depth of about four inches. On opening some barrels a few days ago he said that he found none of the apples frozen and 90 per cent of them perfectly sound. If apples thus protected could endure the weather of the past months, it seems that Mr. Adams' method might be copied to advantage by everyone.—Berea Citizen.

CARING FOR THE YOUNG COW

Early Breeding of Heifers Advocated by Dairyman—Very Best Market for Skim Milk.

(By W. H. UNDERWOOD.) I have long followed the plan of raising and to a dozen calves each year, thus being allowed to replace the inevitable losses of the dairy and to constantly cull and sell those which I consider least desirable. I think this practice ought to be followed on every farm where skim milk is available, because a dairy calf offers one of the very best markets for this dairy by-product.

I let these calves become mothers rather young. It is surprising how very early vigorous young heifer will breed if the opportunity is given her. I had once a Jersey-Holstein cross-bred heifer that gave birth to her full term calf when only fourteen and one-half months old.

It is the business of a dairy cow to give milk and to learn to turn all her products and energies along this channel, and so the earlier she can get started in the right way the better.

It is sometimes said that early breeding stunts or dwarfs a heifer, but I have had many heifers to drop their first calves at from eighteen to twenty months of age, and afterward they developed into cows which were large and vigorous for their breed. I like best to start with a September or October calf and then, if they spend their first winter under favorable conditions, with plenty of skim milk and early cut hay, bran and ground corn in addition, they will be sleek and plump when they go to pasture in the spring.

HOW TO WORK A SEPARATOR

Good Machine Will Soon Pay for Itself and With Proper Care It Will Last Lifetime.

(By BESSIE L. PUTNAM.) Did you ever know a person who has a reliable separator to say that it does not pay? They all tell you it is the way to do it—the only way. Look at a first-class machine and note the high speed attained. Only the best material and workmanship can be included in such a combination. It is no wonder that separators which are worth owning cost money. Yet a good one will soon pay for itself and with proper care it will last almost a lifetime. Look over the standard makes and no others, thoroughly before investing, but get a good one.

The work of separating a moderate amount of milk is easy in comparison with the old way, or even with keeping water on it in a tank. If it runs too heavy a gasoline engine will soon fix that beside proving a most profitable servant in many other duties. Keep a dish for the dog and the cat in a convenient place where you can take off the froth before straining and separating. Froth only proves a nuisance in the separator but the chickens will be glad to get any that the dog or cat leaves.

USEFUL STOOL FOR A MILKER

Provision Is Made in Front for Placing Milk Pail—Not Hard to Put Together.

I have a good milking stool which provides a seat for the milker and a place to set the pail, says a writer in the Farm and Home. Two by 16-inch stuff was used in the making. The seat is 10 inches square, and underneath it is nailed a board 18 inches long which projects out far enough to hold the pail. The legs are 18 inches high.

Great Difference in Milk. Every person who has never milked cows, as well as some who have only witnessed this interesting process as a very safe distance, realize that there is not much variation in the quantity of milk from certain cows in the herd and on the same feed, but to most people "milk is milk," very few having any correct ideas as to what is commonly called the "richness" of it.

Attention! SINGLE YOUNG LADIES

—Your chance to win a—

$45.00 Solid Oak Bedroom Set and Two $30 Gold Watches.

If you want a 14k Gold Watch, Elgin movements of a value not less than $30.00 and a handsome three-piece Solid Oak Bedroom Set of the value of $45.00, the Recorder will give you an opportunity to acquire them, and for the purpose of deciding who shall be the happy recipient of these handsome presents it will conduct a Popularity Contest under the following rules and regulations:

The county is divided into two sections, viz: Beginning on the Ohio river at the mouth of Gunpowder creek, thence with said creek to the forks thereof a short distance above the old Gus Weaver mill site; thence with the north prong of said creek to the Burlington and Florence pike at Limaburg; thence with said pike to the Covington and Lexington pike in the town of Florence; thence with the Covington and Lexington pike to the Boone and Kenton county line between Florence and Erlanger. That part of the county north of said line shall be known as Section No. 1, and that part of the county south of said line shall be known as Section No. 2.

1. The young lady contestant in Section No. 1 who shall receive the largest number of votes in this contest, will be awarded a Gold Watch.

2. The young lady contestant in Section No. 2 who shall receive the largest number of votes will be awarded a Gold watch.

3. The young lady, among all the contestants, in both sections who receives the largest number of votes will be awarded the Bedroom Set. Thus it is seen that some young lady will receive two handsome presents.

4. The votes for each contestant will be determined as follows: Each $1 on subscription sent in by her or her friends will count for her 1,000 votes, while each 50 cents on subscription will count her 500 votes.

5. A contestant or her friends can solicit subscriptions or renewals thereof anywhere they desire—her territory is unlimited.

6. Votes once counted and credited to a contestant will not be allowed transferred to another contestant.

7. No votes will be allowed on subscriptions nor renewals of subscriptions paid prior to this date—Feb. 29, 1912.

8. POSITIVELY no votes will be allowed unless the money for the subscription or the renewal accompanies the same.

9. Renewals nor subscriptions must not be received for a period that will extend beyond the year 1913.

10. Any person renewing his or her subscription or subscribing for the Recorder can indicate for what contestant the votes are to be counted.

11. The votes will be counted at noon on Wednesday of each week and the result published from week to week during the contest, which will close at midnight, July 31, 1912.

12. Only money on subscription to the Recorder will be considered in this contest.

13. Married ladies are not eligible to this contest, but in the event a contestant should marry during the progress of the contest she will not be disqualified by her marriage.

Clarence W. Worthington of near Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Canada, spent part of last week here the guest of D. B. Wallace. He formerly resided at Blount Station and he and his wife are visiting his parents Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Worthington at that place.

Mr. Worthington and wife were presented with a fine daughter last week. They returned this week to their home in Canada. Mr. Worthington and three brothers have been in Canada the last three years and like the country and are prospering. He says it was 33 degrees below zero the first of December in the part of Canada where he resides, but he cold is not felt like it is here owing to the dryness of the atmosphere at that place.

The Walton Baptist church had a large gathering last Saturday to witness the ordination of Wayne D. Byland to the ministry of the Baptist church. The exercises were very impressive and interesting. Those who officiated were Rev. Wm. McMillan of Big Bone Springs, as Moderator; Rev. Charles Bagby of Morning View, Rev. Shirley of Crittenden, pastor Rev. H. C. Wayman, and Prof. J. G. Prather, clerk. A nice dinner was served, and a most delightful day was spent together. Rev. Byland is a young man of great promise and has already demonstrated his ability as a preacher of much merit in the several places he has filled at a substitute. He was called to preach at the new Baptist church at Bank Lick and held services there Saturday night and Sunday.

In the death of Miss Mamie Norman a beautiful life was transplanted from this terrestrial sphere to the celestial abode where suffering and sorrow are forbidden guests. Like a beautiful flower cut down by the early frosts this young life entering the threshold of womanhood succumbed to that fell destroyer, consumption. For several years past the touch of this insidious disease had been noticeable on the young lady, and the stay of the destroyer was undertaken in every way, but the deep seated condition of this fatal malady was too great to respond to any treatment, and in the past year the beautiful girl faded and withered until death claimed it as its own on Wednesday afternoon, March 8th, the spirit of the beloved one went to join those for whom the rewards of a christian life are given. Miss Norman was in her 22nd year and was the daughter of Wm. B. Norman. She was a most lovable young lady being possessed of those attractive qualities of heart and mind that in the affection of all. Her kindly disposition, her gentle manner and pleasant greeting made her a favorite with everybody, and a silent tear is dropped to the memory of one so kind whose eyes are closed in that eternal sleep before the morning of her young life had much more than dawned. Tenderly her remains were laid in Mother Earth last Friday, after services were conducted by Rev. Jot E. Harris at that Methodist church of which she had been a faithful member. The honorary pall bearers were seven of her girl friends, Misses Mary Graham, Mary Miller, Nannie Griffith, Lizzie Johnson, Edith Richey, Maggie Johnson, Jessie Johnson. The floral offerings were extensive and a relative of the high appreciation with which the young lady was held by all. The interment took place at Independence.

Charles R. Slater of Big Bone Springs, spent Friday here the guest of his son Dr. J. G. Slater.

Mrs. Lizzie E. Conrad died at her home near Walton Monday morning after a long illness. The operation had been performed for the removal of an internal trouble. Mrs. Conrad had been ill for a long time and had submitted to a previous operation at the same place, but it had not apparently given her relief. Her condition becoming worse it was decided to undergo another operation on Tuesday. Mrs. William Bonifield and Winston Gaines of Cincinnati, and Mrs. E. K. Menefee and G. C. Rankins of Walton, performed the operation, and it was found that what was afflicted with cancer of the stomach, and that there was no hope for recovery. The weakened condition of the patient and the general conditions were such that she never rallied from the effects of the operation. Her death is a sad blow to her many friends and relatives, and will be the most sorrowful effect on her husband and son who idolized her in the most affectionate manner.

Mrs. Conrad was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hogan of Union, where she was born August 19th, 1872, being therefore in her 40th year at the time of her death. She was married to Bill Conrad, and the husband and one son, John W. Conrad, survive her, besides her parents and three sisters, Mrs. Geo. Rice, Mrs. Will Wilson, and Mrs. Clarence C. Callan of Hamilton, Ohio. The deceased was highly esteemed for many traits of noble womanhood, and she was greatly missed by many friends. The funeral took place Wednesday morning at the Methodist church from the Walton Methodist church of which she was one of its most valued members. Rev. Jos. B. Harris, of Lexington, her former pastor, conducted the services over the remains and administered words of comfort and consolation to the sorrowing ones. The interment took place at Highland cemetery.

I wish to say to the wool growers of Walton precinct that I have been appointed to solicit for the pool. There being no compensation of any consequence I cannot call to see you. Just call me up No. 628, and give me number twelve you wish to pool. Remember we secured two and one-half cents more per pound for our wool last year than those that did not pool. If you have any burs pick them out. It will pay you. Sacks will be furnished at Walton.

After detailing his case he says: "I am only sorry I did not learn sooner of Foley Kidney Pills. In a few days' time my backache completely left me and I felt greatly improved. My kidneys became stronger, dizzy spells left me and I was no longer annoyed at night. I feel 100 per cent better since using Foley Kidney Pills."—For sale at Jones drug store, Walton, Ky.

Bridges and Culverts.
While a number of Kentucky counties are interested in the problem of getting better roads, some of them also are discussing the advisability of building better bridges. The bridge problem and the road problem are inseparably connected.

The county of McCracken has a good system of roads, which are being extended as rapidly as is consistent with fiscal conditions, but its bridges, apparently, are not up to the standard of its highways.

As a result of recent heavy rains numerous wooden bridges and culverts have been destroyed, and it is said that to replace these structures and to make the necessary repairs.

McCracken county already has entered upon the policy of building concrete or iron bridges whenever possible to take the place of wooden ones. It would be money in the pockets of the taxpayers if a similar plan were pursued in every county in the State. Life of wooden bridges under the most favorable conditions is short. If such a structure escapes being washed away by floods it generally is in such a dilapidated condition after two or three years of usage as to require almost continuous repairs for the remainder of its existence. One or two winter seasons, along with intervening spring floods and freshets, usually suffice to destroy a wooden culvert, and the commission, whereas the concrete culvert is practically indestructible if properly made.

It costs more to build good bridges than to build poor ones, but the good ones last longer and are the much less costly in the long run.

WITH—LOUISVILLE
Ed. Sanford, the boy from Rising Sun, Ind., is a Hoosier by choice only. Kentucky has the honor of being the place where he first saw the light of day, and Eddie says the he's come back to help make her name famous. Sanford is one of W. A. Phelan's hot tips, and if he is as good as some of the men that the noted sport writer has started out, Tighe has already secured one man who can win ball games.

Sanford learned the rudiments of the national game with the Delhi, Ohio, independent team. It was here that Phelan, in his wanderings, first saw the young fellow work, and subsequently gave his friends, Mr. Grayson, the tip.

Ed's first experience in professional ranks started with Louisville in the fall of 1910, and although here only a short while, he showed enough stuff to deserve a trial the following spring. Eddie got a good start last year, but had an attack of rheumatism, and the enforced layoff let another man slip in and get his job. Columbia put a bid in for his services, and the big boy went South. It was doubtful if he would have made connections last year, as he was a little inexperienced, but now, after having a successful season chock full of the necessary excitements, etc., Ed's going to get on or bust something trying—Louisville Evening Post.

R. G. Collins, Postmaster, Barnegat, N. J., was troubled with a severe la-grippe last week. He says: "I would be completely exhausted after each fit of violent coughing. I bought a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and it did not take long before the coughing spells had entirely ceased. It can't be beat." For sale at Jones' drug store, Walton, Ky.

FLICKERTOWN.

The sick are on the mend. The back water is coming up rapidly. Sam Johnson will move to C. J. Henesley's house on Ashby Fork this week. William Seabree will move this week to the Wm. Stephens farm vacated by Mr. Bohannon. Misses Kanneys of Idlewild, and J. W. White visited Louie Messmer and daughter, Sunday. Mrs. Lou Sullivan and children, and Mrs. Ben Henesley and Lloyd Prather, visited Mrs. J. W. White, Saturday. Geo. Bohannon's sale was well attended and everything sold for a good price. A good lunch was served at noon.

HERE AND THERE.

Sunday was a spring day. Farmers are very backward with their spring work. Feed stuff is not only high but hard to find around here. Catherine Sullivan has been quite sick the past week with a severe cold. Miss Lola Beeson was visiting her aunt, Mrs. Chas. Beeson, last Wednesday. Mrs. Ethel Worford is dangerously ill with typhoid fever at her home in Cleves. Ira Ryle's little daughter who has been very sick with bronchial pneumonia, is some better. Mr. Seabree has vacated the Bohannon farm from Billy Stephens and will move Tuesday. M. C. Stephens hauled a load of 10 tons corn from Lawrenceburg, one day last week. Geo. Bohannon's yearling colt got fast in its stall last Thursday night and broke its neck. Elmer Montgomery, of Gallatin county, spent a couple of days last week with his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bohannon. Herbert Snyder, who has position as motorman on the Cincinnati street cars, spent from Wednesday until Sunday with home folks here. Leo and Bernard Seabree became so disgusted with housekeeping, while their mother is away, that they are both on the verge of committing matrimony. Leo Messmer who went to the city some time ago to secure medical treatment returned to his home last Saturday. His condition has improved very little. While in Lawrenceburg, one day last week, we had the pleasure of shaking the hand of Dr. Geo. F. Smith, whom we are glad to report is enjoying good health and an immense practice. Geo. Bohannon's sale last Saturday was attended by a large crowd and every thing sold well. Horses brought from $165 to $175; cows, from $35 to $58; sheep, $6.90 per head; hay from $22 to $24 a ton; corn, from 55 to 57 cents a bushel. Leslie and Bernard Seabree received a message from their mother, last Saturday, telling them that their sister, Mrs. Ethel Worford, who has been sick with typhoid fever for several weeks, has taken a change for the worse, and was in a critical condition. There seems to be some misunderstanding between Mr. Johnson and the parties on Woolper, who were to furnish him timber to saw. Mr. Johnson says he is ready to move his mill when he can furnish him the amount of sawing that he wants, and they declare that he has promised him considerably more than the amount that he asked for, and they will wait for him if he will move his mill.

R. G. Collins, Postmaster, Barnegat, N. J., was troubled with a severe laryngeal cough. He says: "I would be completely exhausted after each fit of violent coughing. I bought bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and before I had taken it all the coughing spells had entirely ceased. It can't be beat." He was at Jones' drug store, Walton, Ky.

March has been a gloomy month so far, productive of a great deal of sickness.

Cards have been received announcing the arrival of a little daughter at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Childress on the 14th, whom they have named Margaret Russell. Mr. and Mrs. Childress are the proud parents of four daughters. The Pastors' Aid Society of the Methodist church met with Mrs. J. C. Tanner, of Erlanger Road, on Tuesday of last week. Following the meeting the ladies tendered Mrs. Furnish Underhill, near Tanner a surprise shower, after which refreshments were served.

GASBURG.

Sunday was the warmest day of the year to date. The water is over most of the low bottoms and still rising. The demolition of Split Rock will commence about the first of July. Some of the Recorder's, correspondents appear not to know that the Red Bird, like the poor, abideth with us always. The heavy loads of tobacco that have been hauled lately to Petersburg and Aurora has put the roads in a very bad condition. Fifty years ago today, March 18th, 1862, this reporter and about 25 other wounded Confederates were shipped by boat down Clarksville, Tenn., to Cincinnati, Ohio. They received their wounds at Fort Donelson.

SPLIT ROCK.

Seabree and family moved, last Thursday, to his new home, he purchased of Lewis Henesley, known as the George Allen farm of about 20 acres. It is reported that Hon. N. S. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Berkshire, Mrs. H. Ryle, Mrs. Clutterbuck and Floyd Ryle. The Epworth League services at the Methodist church Sunday evening were most ably conducted by Mr. Raymond Witham. The subject for the evening was "The Ravages of Impure Living." The scripture lesson being Hosea IV. The Epworth League seems to be doing a good work and the large crowds in attendance shows the appreciation and interest manifested. The graded school at this place closed last Friday. The term has been highly successful during the term. Mrs. Rennells, of Newport, presented the school with a beautiful flag. She also offered a gold pin to the pupil in the first year High School who would write the best essay on "Our Patriotism." This pin was won by Miss Ruth Snyder, aged twelve years. Prof. Hays will teach the remainder of the term. Mrs. R. B. Bondurant and Miss Louellen Acra will teach a spring term for the lower grades. We regret very much to lose Rev. Brooks and Prof. Skinner, who will both leave this week. One of the pleasant events of the week was a social given by the Epworth League last Friday evening. The M. E. parsonage, where Rev. S. J. Bradley and wife warmed every heart by their hearty welcome and good cheer. About fifty were present to participate in and enjoy the following program which was well rendered: Song—"Epworth Rallying Song." Scripture and prayer—Rev. S. J. Bradley. Duet—"I'm a Soldier in the Army of Jesus"—Mrs. J. M. Grant and Miss Letitia Thompson. Talk on Cuban Missions—Rev. S. J. Bradley. Solo—"My Lord, My Lord, Grant." Recitation—"Neither do I condemn thee"—Miss Ruth Snyder. Reading—"The Beautiful other side"—Mrs. Mae Whiting. Vocal Solo—Miss Lelia Thompson. Pen contest, in which Mr. Everett Helm won the prize, a ham sandwich served with a cube of cheese. Delightful refreshments were served, and all went away feeling that it was indeed good to be there, and hoping the Literary Department of the League would give another social in the near future.

GUNPOWDER.

Mud roads are something fierce. L. B. Husby and family, of Erlanger, spent last Sunday with W. H. Rice, of Florence. Ben Long has sworn vengeance against groundhogs, and is going to kill them as they are exterminated. He has killed six. W. H. Rice, of Florence, is looking after his interests in this neighborhood one day last week. Daddy is always a welcome visitor.

Feed is getting very scarce in this neighborhood and quite a lot of hay is being hauled from the city and is selling at fancy prices. W. H. Smith and family and Lewis Weaver and family were last Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Tanner had the misfortune to lose a valuable cow a few days ago. She fell and broke her leg and had to be killed. Shelby Aylor installed a telephone in his residence a few days since on the farmers' side of the road, and is now in touch with the outside world. We learned over a private grapevine that E. O. Rouse has purchased a half interest in the hardware store of Mr. Crouch, at Erlanger. We wish him great success in his new enterprise. Last Sunday was a beautiful day and the robins made their appearance on that day, which is an indication that spring is approaching and it is quite a relief to think that the worst is over. L. P. Aylor returned a few days since from a trip thru the South. He visited Columbia, South Carolina, and other places of interest but didn't quite reach the south pole. See him for particulars.

The young people responded to an invitation from Courtney Williams, last Friday evening, and report a pleasant time. Many friends of Jas. G. Blanton, formerly of Union, Ky., now residing in a Stamping Ground, Scott county, are grieved to hear of his serious illness. Mrs. Margaret Sanders, widow of the late Wm. Sanders, passed away last Friday. Mrs. Sanders was a most estimable lady, and the sympathy of a wide circle of friends is extended to her daughter, Miss Sallie Baker, who is only near relatives left to mourn her loss. Mrs. Sanders was a faithful member of the Richmond Presbyterian church, and after a funeral discourse there last Sunday morning, the interment took place in the cemetery adjoining the church.

A most delightful recital was given at the school house last Saturday afternoon by Miss Ella Lett, of Erlanger. Miss Lett, assisted by Miss J. G. Garrison's music pupils. The sketch and club singing by Masters Reuben Conner, Emerson Smith and Mattie Conner, were very attractive. The Irish pipe band, directed by Misses Norma Rachal and Jennie Cleek was beautiful. Misses Mary Evelyn Rouse and Ella Judge recited in a manner to reflect credit upon themselves and their teacher. Miss Alma Blankenbaker's music was greatly enjoyed—and the fact both teachers and the pupils deserve much credit. Miss Julia Reed, Miss Jessie Cleek and Miss Ella Judge admirably presented a very clever sketch, "The Bachelor Girls."

GRANT R. D. No. 1. Mrs. A. W. Cook is quite ill. Mrs. Warren Plick died at one o'clock Monday night. Gorn, March 18th, to Bernard Rora and wife a boy. Rue went to Aurora, Sunday, on a pleasure trip. Pat Sandford caught a bale of hay in the river here last Saturday. Pat is watching the papers to see if a reward is being offered for its return. Very little spring farm work has been done here, owing to the very inclement weather. This has been a very unusual winter all the way through. There is every evidence from reports that Eddie Sandford will make good with Louisville this year. Reports from West Baden say his arm is in fine trim. The river got on the rampage during the recent rains and is now above the road in several places on a very narrow track. Our carrier has covered his whole route nevertheless. We connected with Elmer Conley, a brother carrier, at Waterloo Friday. A very peculiar feeling of kinship exists among carriers who know each others troubles. Brothers, let's join the National Association and become better acquainted.

ANOTHER GOOD WOMAN GONE.

Mrs. G. G. Hughes departed this life last Friday morning, the 15th inst., after an illness of several weeks of a brain trouble. She was a daughter of the late Thomas and Sarah Dempsey and was one of a large family of seven. All three of whom survive—Mrs. Jane Riggs, of Indiana; Mrs. B. C. Gray, of Cedarville, Ohio; and Mrs. John Reed, of St. Louis, Missouri. Miss Hattie Dempsey and Mr. G. G. Hughes were married November 15th, 1878. To them were children were born, Mrs. Earl Walton, of Petersburg; William and Miss Margaret, the latter the youngest and fifteen years of age. All three survive. Mrs. Hughes was a member of the Presbyterian church, a most excellent and christian lady, whose life is worthy of emulation. She was highly esteemed by all who knew her, and her death cast a pall of gloom over this entire community, where she was recognized as an ideal wife, a loving and indulgent mother and an unselfish and steadfast friend and neighbor. Her death is a hard blow to her family and sisters, and the once happy family is bowed in grief, in which they have the sympathy of all. After a brief service conducted by Rev. Edgar C. Ryle, at the house at 2 p. m., last Saturday, the remains were deposited in the vault in the Odd-Fellows' cemetery near town, where they will be finally interred.

CARD OF THANKS—We wish to extend to our friends our heartfelt thanks for their devotion and kindness shown our loved one, Mrs. G. G. Hughes, during her fatal illness. G. G. Hughes and children.

Let Mexicans Solve

Mexico's Problems.

With the Mexican States of the North and South the theater of rebellion and disorder, and with the suffering that must prevail in the Central States thru the lack of employment for so many persons consequent upon demoralization of all classes of business affairs, the Madero government has indeed, a surplus of difficulties in its administration.

It is now more than 18 months since Madero started in upon his patriotic mission of arousing the Mexican people against what he termed a tyrannical administration and appealed to them to gather around his revolutionary banner. He had a mission to perform and it that mission was to arouse his country he has succeeded; if it was to inaugurate a revolt he accomplished it; if it was to fan the embers of factional strife into living flame, or to efface the order which Diaz established in nearly forty years of devotion to his country's progress, the bands that are destroying the railways and robbing the ranches and the thousands of fugitives seeking safety, proclaim Diaz's overthrow and Madero's triumph in his crusade.

Madero desired not these fearful results which have come with his insurrection. A man of theories, a man of high ideals, a man eminently fair and devoted to the cause of liberty, it is yet plain to be seen he is dealing with a people who mistake license for liberty and deem disorder synonym with patriotism.

It is a Mexican problem to be solved only by Mexicans, whether the one who will solve it finally be named Madero, Orozco, Figueroa, Zapata, Trencio or some one still unknown as a leader of the Mexican people.

Our Government should do all possible to prevent any further intervention arising. The Administration should continue to regard it as civil war in Mexico, to be fought out to settlement by the Mexicans themselves. Although it has been sixteen months since the insurrections were commenced by Madero himself it is fortunate that up to now so few Americans have been injured in the conflicts between the opposing forces.

It is quite evident that all the factions are aware of the danger to Mexico if this country should be provoked to intervention. There are no people in the world more devoted to their country's freedom than are the people of Mexico. Regardless of class or faction they would be a unit against a foreign intervention, and such intervention would need expensive and prolonged hostilities.

When the bankers, merchants, hacendados and other business men in Mexico find they must unite and stop insurrections—if they would preserve their own lives and property they will be strong enough to do it without foreign troops to aid them. When they band together to preserve peace and order they can select a leader who will rule. —Enquirer.

Plucky School Teachers.

The real heroes of the recent snow blockades in Western Kansas were three plucky schoolmarmas. Miss Agnes Finchem teaches the Mound School District, northwest of Turon. Her home is at Pratt, and she had gone there to spend Sunday when the big snow came last week and tied up both railways under deep drifts.

The school teacher, realizing that it would be several days before she could get through the drifts started out on foot to go to her school.

It is nearly 15 miles from her home to the Mound School, but the plucky girl walked it through drifts in one afternoon's time and facing the cold north wind.

Stories are told of two other school teachers who made similar walks through the drifts to get to their schools. Miss Ethel Chadock, a Rush county teacher, walked from her home in Rush Center to LaCrosse, seven miles, in deep drifts and against a bitter cold wind.

Miss Nettie Allen, another Rush county teacher, walked from her home 20 miles northeast of LaCrosse to that town to get to her school. She walked to Bison on Monday, and then on to LaCrosse Tuesday, in time to be in school.

These plucky teachers made these walks on roads where the drifts were 10 to 15 feet deep, and against bitter cold winds from the north—Kansas City Journal.

Possibilities of Owen County.

That the people of Owen county are today sending out of the county the hard earned money for feed for themselves and stock is by no means a reason that they cannot grow it here. There is no more fertile country in the state and the soil will do its part if industry and brains are used upon it.

Very little effort was used last year to provide a surplus of feed for stock or man. At three out of every five families fail to raise a good garden; but a little millet, sorghum, or oats sown for feed, for stock or fowls and the consequences that every one today is short of food product living on bread and meat the highest commodities on the market would be different.

As nearly everybody and everything else is having anniversary celebrations it will be in order before a great while for the Gleaner to have a blowout in honor of its twenty-eighth birthday. It is as good as a summer's dream, but the present editor came to Henderson in the early summer of 1885 with a hatful of type and a handful of ambition and before he was of age and started the Henderson Weekly Gleaner. Many of those who were kind enough to give the boy a helping hand in his way are yet subscribers to the paper and have never missed a copy. —Henderson Gleaner.

It's hard to learn an old dog new tricks. Sam Brumfield, who for nearly twenty years has served as head waiter at the Danville hotel, assumed his new duties as janitor in Collector Wiseman's office a few days ago. After being sworn in Sam took his position in Mr. Wiseman's room to wait orders. Presently two gentlemen came in. In his usual polite manner Sam beckoned them to follow him, piloted them to a long table, drew out the chairs, and, as the gentlemen sat down showed the chairs under them. He then beckoned to Herbert McGrath, another janitor, held up two fingers and said "Take these gentlemen's orders." —Danville Messenger.

A Skyscraper.

Extending skyward to a height of 495 feet above the level of the street and forming a striking contrast to the postoffice, the Chamber of Commerce, which in their time were considered models of architectural beauty, industry and daring, Cincinnati is soon to have a thirty-four story building, the fourth tallest structure in the world. It will be known as the United Central building and will be located on the southwest corner of Vine street and Fourth avenue, extending south to Baker street, on the site of the Chamber of Commerce.

The dimensions of this colossal skyscraper, which, excepting the Woolworth building, the Metropolitan tower and the Singer building in New York City—which means the world of skyscrapers—are immense. The building will have a frontage of 100 feet on Vine street 150 feet to Baker street, on which thoroughfare it will be 100 feet wide. The highest point of the building will be the lantern on the Fourth avenue side, which will be 495 feet above the earth. There will be an additional fifty-two feet, or two stories, underground, which in reality makes the building 547 feet or thirty-six stories in height. The structure will contain 5,175,000 cubic feet, or will be ready for occupancy in or before May 1, 1913. The cost of the building will be $3,000,000.

If you want a 14k Gold Watch, Elgin movements of a value not less than $30.00 and a handsome three-piece Solid Oak Bedroom Set of the value of $45.00, the Recorder will give you an opportunity to acquire them, and for the purpose of deciding who shall be the happy recipient of these handsome presents it will conduct a Popularity Contest under the following rules and regulations:

The county is divided into two sections, viz: Beginning on the Ohio river at the mouth of Gunpowder creek, thence with said creek to the forks thereof a short distance above the old Gus Weaver mill site; thence with the north prong of said creek to the Burlington and Florence pike at Limaburg; thence with said pike to the Covington and Lexington pike in the town of Florence; thence with the Covington and Lexington pike to the Boone and Kenton county line between Florence and Erlanger. That part of the county north of said line shall be known as Section No. 1, and that part of the county south of said line shall be known as Section No. 2.

1. The young lady contestant in Section No. 1 who shall receive the largest number of votes in this contest, will be awarded a Gold Watch.

2. The young lady contestant in Section No. 2 who shall receive the largest number of votes will be awarded a Gold watch.

3. The young lady, among all the contestants, in both sections who receives the largest number of votes will be awarded the Bedroom Set. Thus it is seen that some young lady will receive two handsome presents.

4. The votes for each contestant will be determined as follows: Each $1 on subscription sent in by her or her friends will count for her 1,000 votes, while each 50 cents on subscription will count her 500 votes.

5. A contestant or her friends can solicit subscriptions or renewals thereof anywhere they desire—her territory is unlimited.

6. Votes once counted and credited to a contestant will not be allowed transferred to another contestant.

7. No votes will be allowed on subscriptions nor renewals of subscriptions paid prior to this date—Feb. 29, 1912.

8. Positively no votes will be allowed unless the money for the subscription or the renewal accompanies the same.

9. Renewals nor subscriptions must not be received for a period that will extend beyond the year 1913.

10. Any person renewing his or her subscription or subscribing for the Recorder can indicate for what contestant the votes are to be counted.

11. The votes will be counted at noon on Wednesday of each week and the result published from week to week during the contest, which will close at midnight, July 3d, 1912.

12. Only money on subscription to the Recorder will be considered in this contest.

13. Married ladies are not eligible to this contest, but in the event a contestant should marry during the progress of the contest she will not be disqualified by her marriage.

14. Any single white lady nominated by a reputable and responsible person is eligible to this contest.

Nominations are now in order.

Farmers Win.

Frankfort, March 18.—Farmers won a victory in Kentucky today when the Court of Appeals handed down three opinions in cases of the Commonwealth against The International Harvester Company of America, in which it is held that the company is a trust and is selling its products too high in Kentucky.

In the case of The Commonwealth against The International Harvester Co., appealed from Spencer county, where the indictment to the demurrer was sustained by the lower Court, the Court of Appeals reversed and directs trial in this case in an indication of the slowness with which the wheels of justice turn in this state this indictment was found December 1, 1908.

In the case of The International Harvester Co., against The Commonwealth, from Bullitt county, a fine of $5,000 assessed against the company for violating Statute 3945 as amended by 3941 of the Kentucky Statutes is affirmed. In this case the company was indicted for selling its products for a price greater than its real value. The company defended its action on the grounds of increased cost of materials entering into the manufacture, increased cost of labor, increased cost of putting machinery on the market and the increased efficiency of the machines. The court holds that the company is a trust organized by a combine of the Champion, Deering, McCormick, Plano Milling, and Osborn Machines Company, and that the increased price on binders of $12, mowers $4 and hay rakes $2 is greater than the real value of the articles. As a result the company must sell its binders for $12 less, mowers $4 less and hay rakes $2 less than usual.

The judgment in the case of the company against the Commonwealth from Oldham county was reversed because it was tried on an indictment that was found by a grand jury after a statute of limitation had expired. The grand jury, however, said that it was in lieu of an old indictment, but the old indictment was not read in the jury. The court holds in these cases that there are no antitrust laws in Kentucky and that any company, whether considered a trust or not, may do business in Kentucky as long as it does not sell its products at a price greater than its real value or depreciate the prices of its products below the real value.

Congressman A. B. Rouse is sanguine that he will succeed in getting Congress to make a liberal appropriation for the improvement of the Licking river for several miles beginning at its mouth which is good news for the citizens of Covington and Newport. He thinks he will succeed in having Ft. Thomas converted into a naval station at which about 1,000 men will be stationed. Newport is anxious to have this done. Congressman Rouse is surely doing things at Washington.

William Hedges had his yellow seed corn tested by the Boone County High School, and every grain sent forth a good, strong sprout. Mr. Hedges selects his seed corn in the fall and stores it properly.

Dr. M. J. Crouch, manager of the Consolidated Telephone Co., desires the Recorder to request the party who sent him an unsigned check for $7.50 to send him his address.

James P. Ryle will have a considerable sale of personal property at his home down on Gunpowder creek on the 30th, inst. Read his sale advertisement elsewhere in this issue.

Teachers of Boone county are invited to attend the Reading Circle which meets every Thursday afternoon at 3:30 at the High School building.

FOR SALE—Three fresh Jersey milk cows. Apply to R. B. Carver, Burlington, Ky.

Joseph Oscar Botts.

Mr. Joseph Oscar Botts was born in this county in the year of 1834, August 21st; died March 7th, 1912, aged 77 years, six months and 15 days. At the age of four years he moved with his parents to St. Mary's Ill., and uniting with the Baptist church there. He tried to live a consistent Christian life. He loved his Bible and was so often found searching it in our home. In 1853 he was married to Miss Ellen Davis, of Illinois. To them were born four children, all of whom survive him. One son, A. E. Botts, lives in Santrosa, Cal., another son and his baby daughter, S. J. and Mrs. Lavina Hazel, live in Salem, Oregon. Another daughter, Mrs. Laura McKim, lives in Lenora, Kansas. He leaves 12 grandchildren.

He went with his family farther west and united with the Methodist church of which he was a worker for a number of years. He was converted under and baptized into the Baptist church by his grandfather, Joseph Botts.

He loved the Western countries and was in the Civil war. He was loved and respected by all ages and sex, and was dressed by the majority of his younger friends as Uncle Joe, or Cousin Oscar. Especially were the little children drawn to him by his kind, cheerful disposition. A child had a warm place in his heart as did also the sick or needy. He delighted in handing one a bunch of flowers or fruit.

He came East in 1898, returned to Illinois, and in 1900, came back to this county and was married to Miss Laura A. Moody, August 9th, 1900, daughter of J. M. Moody, deceased. She survives him. He was a member of Bellevue Baptist church.

A precious one we have gone; a voice we loved is still. A place is vacant in our home, a chair at the table, by the fire-side, the one who offered the evening prayer at the family altar, which never can be filled.

Mrs. W. W. Green. CARD OF THANKS.—We desire to express our heartfelt thanks and appreciation to our friends and neighbors, and Drs. Perkins and G. F. Smith, of Lawrenceburg, for their kindness, sympathy and untiring efforts during the illness of our beloved husband and brother J. O. Botts. Mrs. J. O. Botts, J. H. Moody and Mrs. W. W. Green.

John McElroy Dead.

The Death Angel, which seems to be hovering in our midst, claimed as its victim on March 7th one of our oldest and most esteemed citizens, John McElroy. Mr. McElroy was born in Ireland in 1837 and came to America while still a youth. He was married in 1865 to Ann Taylor, who died a few years later.

In 1871 he was married to Elizabeth Dixon, who preceded him to the grave about a year ago. For years Mr. McElroy had been the victim of a malady that caused him intense suffering, but with the insight of a true Christian he saw in it all the hand of God and patiently bore the cross here because of the crown he hoped to wear up yonder.

He often regretted his inability to attend his church of which he was a faithful member since 1871.

As a father he was loving, kind and thoughtful and though his daughters are wounded and heart sore they are able in their christian faith to say "God's will is best, and they realize that it "was not in error."

They take this means to express to their friends and neighbors their appreciation of much kindness shown them in the hour of need; also to Mr. Wilson, the undertaker, do they extend their thanks for his efficient service. Verona, Ky.

Quite a number of the citizens of Big Bone neighborhood, were in town yesterday to attend the trial of the application of W. V. Grimley and others to open a new road. When the case was called for hearing in the county court several of the witnesses were absent and the application was continued until next May.

The equinoctial storm came in a few days ahead of time, arriving last Tuesday afternoon, accompanied by thunder and lightning.

The teachers money for the sixth month may not be received before June. The ten dollars for janitors will be sent with the last month's check.

Edgar C. Riley.

Spring is due to arrive today and it is hoped it will not be delayed, and that it will come to remain its full time.

Mrs. Bettie Clore, of Bullittsburg neighborhood, is very low, and not expected to recover.

It looks like this part of the county is for more bad weather.

FOR SALE—Good driving and work horse, also a Chief Cream Separator—good as new, also a Lawn Mower. Will sell at a bargain. Address or call on Mr. Rella Sullivan, Rabbit Hash, Ky.

A. G. McConnell.

After several months illness of an affliction the best medical skill of the country and constant care of a devoted wife, children and friends failed to relieve, the spirit of Mr. Angero G. McConnell took its flight, closing the life work of an excellent husband, an indulgent father, a true Christian, a splendid business man, one who was charitable in the truest meaning of the word. Deceased was born in Boone county, Kentucky, almost a year ago. Coming to this county in 1893, he bought the farm out on the Lebanon road, where he resided until his death. His beloved wife, who was Miss Caroline Calvert, a member of one of the most prominent families of his county, survives him, also the following children, John R., of Detroit, Mich., Samuel C. of Danville, Mrs. Elizabeth Bepko of Port William, Ohio, Mrs. Marie Van Brunt, of Palotka, Fla., Will R., of Louisville, Edward F., of Philadelphia, Pa., and Angella, of Danville. Mr. John McConnell, of this county is a brother. The subject of this sketch was educated at Kentucky Wesleyan College, made the good confession at the age of nineteen, uniting with the Southern M. E. church, and in all the remaining years of his life he was a leader in every good work. The life he lived was an influence for the greatest good. He was a member of the Official Board of his church in this city, the surviving members acting as pall bearers, yesterday afternoon. Truly the life of one of the best of earth has ended, as far as mortality is concerned, yet above all the earthly belongings he leaves—yes, far above these—the rich heritage of a well-spent life as a Christian husband, father, brother, relative and friend. The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. P. Strother, assisted by Rev. C. M. Humphrey, who justly pronounced the highest eulogies that could possibly be expressed, there being one of the largest crowds that ever gathered on any similar occasion. Dr. E. H. Pearce closing the service with a touching prayer at the grave in beautiful Bellevue cemetery.—Danville paper.

TESTING OF MILK

One of the Educational Features Added to The Work of The Boone High School.

A four-bottle Babcock milk tester has just been installed at the High School. It will be used to teach the pupils the very interesting and essential part of a farmer's work, and incidentally to help the farmers of the county know the respective value of their dairy cows. All are invited to send in samples of milk to be tested.

Farmers are coming to realize that it is possible for them to be business-like in their work. In other lines of business, the machine that is not efficient is thrown on the scrap heap, the employee that fails to come up to a proper standard is discharged. The good business man is sure to test and quick to discover the elements in his business that do not pay.

The milk tester is a means whereby the farmer may separate the good butter cows from the bad and may thus add many dollars to his income.

H. W. Elliott, of Sulphur, Secretary of the State Mission Board, will be at the Burlington Christian church on the fifth Sunday in March. Mr. Elliott is one of the leading ministers of the Christian church in Kentucky. All are cordially invited to attend.

I have a nice line of Ladies' Misses and childrens hats which will be on hand at my home on and after April 1st, all are invited to call and see them.

The weather the past month has not been at all favorable to young lambs. Nice, bright, dry weather is best adapted to the growth of the young mutton producers.

Sickness and bad weather, have been a serious drawback to the Burlington schools all winter, and neither the teachers nor the pupils have had an opportunity to do satisfactory work.

It has been raining and turning to snow and then raining some more, and turning to snow all winter, and the oldest inhabitant gives it up, and says he never saw a winter just like it.

The report that I have given up the Boone House in Burlington, is a mistake. I am still doing business at the old stand and will be glad to have your patronage.

The milk hauler who comes into the local creamery over the East Bend road ought to provide himself with a 350 horsepower gasoline mud scow, or buy an air ship for use in his business for the next several weeks.

So far leap year does not seem to be cutting any ice in regards to the consummation of matrimonial affairs in this particular locality. What's the matter girls, don't the young masculines hereabout come up to the required standard?

Lloyd Weaver, an expert angler over on Gunpowder, was in Burlington, last Saturday, singing "it will soon be time to go fishing if winter will break." He anticipates an abundance of fine sport with hook and line this spring.

Esquire William Stephens and Geo. Bohannon, of Petersburg precinct, were in Burlington one day the past week closing up the deal by which the Squire became the owner of the Bohannon farm of 213 acres. The land cost Mr. Stephens about $35 an acre.

The town of Burlington was never more completely submerged in mud than it has been this month, and the remnant of the oil that was used on the streets last summer, to exterminate the dust, adds to the repulsive appearance of the mud.

Every farmer should test his seed corn and do it now. Do not wait until planting time. Experiment show that a large per cent of corn grown last year is not fit for seed corn. The yield depends very much upon the seed stand. In order to get a good stand you must plant good seed. Test it.

Turnpikes went all to pieces last week, and heavily loaded wagons cut great furrows in them, and on the hills the water ran along the tracks in large streams. The road bed had thawed through it sped up in great mounds, which gave away under the loaded wagons. Some think he might have met with foul play.

A Colored Debating Society.

The colored people of Burlington have organized an old fashioned debating society which meets every Wednesday night at the colored Baptist church, where they debate various subjects and have an interesting time. On Wednesday night of last week they discussed two questions, "which is of the most value to man, the cow or the horse?" and which is the most beneficial to man, money or principle? Two speeches are allowed on each side of a question, and sometimes the discussion detained until near midnight. These discussions can be made instructive and profitable to the society so long as it is conducted in the proper manner and so far there seems to be a disposition to do that, and it is to be hoped those in charge of the society will be successful.

Henry Rice, colored, of Burlington, is one blind, yet he can go about town without difficulty and occasional goes alone to the residences of colored friends some distance from Burlington. When asked how it is that he can travel about so well he replies, "I keep the lay of the ground in my mind all the time and having been thoroughly acquainted with the face of the country before I lost my sight I am able to tell where I am when walking about. I always take my bearing from my house, and by keeping my head I have never yet got lost. So long as I place things in my house I have no trouble in getting about my room, but when another person places things in other place of furniture unknown to me then I have my troubles. This man gets about with such little difficulty that some there be who think his vision is not entirely gone, but there is no question about the man's total blindness, and he is only an example of what a person can accomplish when endowed with great determination.

By the way, Ernest Ryle, carrier on the Bellevue rural mail route has developed into a poet. He sent some of his verses to this office and they are both humorous and to the point, but as the Recorder never publishes poetry, the manuscript was put away for future reference, especially when the office force feels like indulging in a good laugh.

Has Some Bad Trips.

Elmer Conley, carrier on rural route No. 2 out of Burlington, always makes it a point to serve daily every box it is possible for him to reach. For instance, when he arrived at the ford at W. C. Weaver's on Gunpowder creek, last Friday, the stream was at high tide and he could not cross, when he returned to Burlington and back tracked via of Waterloo to the ford below William Phillips' on Gunpowder creek, thus serving considerably over one-half of the boxes on his route. The services of such a determined and efficient carrier ought to be and are surely appreciated by the people along his route. The fact is each of the rural carriers in this county is so efficient and such a prime favorite with the people he serves that each route boasts of having the best, most prompt and most obliging carrier in the State. This is as it should be, and it is hoped that the rural service in Boone county will be maintained at the high standard to which the present force of carriers have brought it.

FEEDING ROUGHAGE TO PIGS

Box Arranged With Holes Eight Inches Apart and One End Tilted Will Be Found Suitable.

Nature designed the hog to eat nuts, roots, etc., and to graze for his roughage. Under careful management, however, alfalfa hay, silage and even clover hay may be fed with good results. The ration should always be properly balanced with plenty of grain in order that it may not be too bulky, for the pig has a small stomach, notwithstanding the reputation he has for large consumption, says the Home-ated. A box arranged as shown in the illustration is very useful in feeding coarse roughage to pigs. Make the holes about eight inches in diameter, so as to allow the pig to reach far enough into the box to secure necessary hay. The rear side of the box is placed sloping to the front, so that the hay is constantly kept close to the round opening. Some fastening should be provided to hold down the lid or the ravenous pig will crawl into the box and disturb the others.

KEEPING EWE'S FLEECE DRY

Highly Important That Breeding Sheep Should Receive Good Shelter From Either Rain or Snow.

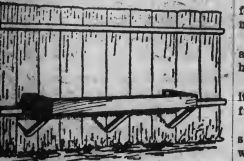

The protection of breeding ewes from falling snow is important, especially is it important when it falls in the form of rain. Winter rains and also sleet are always cold. If sheep of the open woolled breed are long exposed to these, they may suffer great harm. The closed woolled breeds, as the merinos, says Thomas Shaw, will be harmed much less, as the water cannot readily enter the wool which they carry. The shelter provided up to the lambing season may be the simplest kind, providing it will protect from storms and wind. The aim should be to give breeding ewes large liberty in winter, if the ground is bare, or even partially, for it will do them good to give them large liberty. They will make excursions into the fields in search of grass and the exercise will do them much good. They should be allowed to lie in a well bedded yard at night, or in the shed or house adjoining, as they prefer.

The other necessary attentions include regular feeding, a supply of salt at all times accessible, an ample supply of pure water and yards apart from those of horses and cattle.

FEED TROUGH IS SHELTERED

Not Advisable to Confine Sheep Too Much in Winter, But They Must Be Ample Protected.

I do not believe in keeping sheep confined too much in winter, but I know that they must be carefully protected against severe winds, says a writer in Farm and Home. I have used the portable feed troughs, but as a rule, it is almost necessary to keep these out in the open, and so for winter feeding I use a trough that is fastened to a high board fence, and the fence protects the sheep while they are eating.

A Sheltered Sheep Trough.

have arranged is shown in the accompanying drawing. The ends of this trough come out easily, so that every aspect of dirt can be swept out of the trough.

Mistake of Breeders. A great many breeders seem to think that if they possess a pure-bred boar the quality of the sows does not count for much. This is a sad mistake indeed, and farmers cannot be too careful in the selection of well-bred sows.

Stock and Prevailing Prices. When prices of live stock decline do not give up the business. Year in and year out, there is always good money in raising hogs, sheep, cattle and horses.

RAISING POULTRY FOR EGGS

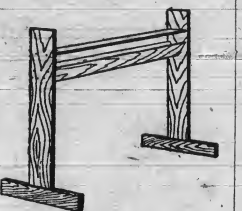

Maine Agricultural Experiment Station Issues Bulletin Giving Results With Plymouth Rocks.

Under the above title the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station has issued Bulletin 122, which summarizes all of the results of the experiments which have been carried on at the station during the last 13 years in attempting to improve by breeding the average egg production of a strain of barred Plymouth Rock poultry. An account is given of the results of the earlier experiments in selecting the highest producers as breeders without regard to any other qualities than their trap nest records. It is shown that this plan of breeding failed to obtain any distinct improvement in flock production. The experiments of the station to find out whether continued artificial incubation and brooding has a harmful effect on egg production are described. The effect of inbreeding on egg production is discussed on the basis of extensive experimental records. It is followed by a clear and simple explanation of a new plan of breeding which has been tried during the past five years, and which is based upon the conception that high egg productiveness is inherited in certain "blood lines" and not in others, and that by a proper system of pedigree selection it is possible to isolate the high producing lines. The last section of the bulletin is devoted to an exposition of the gratifying success which has attended the application of this new plan of breeding to the station flock. Strains which have high egg productiveness fixed as a definite character have now been obtained and are being propagated at the station.

FOR FEEDING TURKEYS ONLY

Small V-shaped Trough Elevated to Height to Allow Big Birds to Pick From Is Useful.

Often on a farm where turkeys are raised right along with the chickens and other poultry, it is desirable to feed them heavier than the other poultry, yet suitable means of doing so are not available without a fenced yard to separate them, writes P. C. Gross of Ohio in the Prairie Farmer. In such cases the following contrivance serves admirably: A small V-shaped trough, of immaterial length, is elevated by means of supports to a height that will allow the turkeys to stand on the floor and pick from it, yet be too high to permit the chickens and small fowls doing likewise. Three or four inches above the top of the trough a board, as wide as the trough, is attached flatwise. This prevents the chickens from flying up and standing on the edge of the trough. The sides of the trough should not be very wide as this would prevent the turkeys from reaching the corn or other feed in the bottom of the trough.

With such a trough the turkeys may be fattened right among the other poultry, and no feed wasted on the other fowls.

Of course, the chickens will climb on top of the flat board, but from it they can not reach the trough.

POULTRY NOTES

A good egg is a rare production. The breeding season will be upon us now before we have had time to think.

The Indian Runner duck is not inclined to fatten so readily as other varieties.

It is estimated that it requires the feathers from about ten ducks to make a pound.

Full fed hens, having a well balanced ration, will lay larger eggs than hens on stunted feed.

A warm house does not mean that it be air-tight. Laying hens must have fresh air at all times of the year.

By this time you should have your spring breeders and the cockers with which they are to be mated selected.

The Indian Runner duck is not a new variety, although it is not as old as some of the other varieties of ducks.

Duck eggs are in demand by confectioners, as they impart a glaze to their icing, which cannot be had with hen eggs.

The critical period of the turkey is the first eight weeks of its life.

About 48 eggs is the average yearly record of the hen.

With many flocks, the addition of an ample supply of meat to the ration will cause a marked increase in the size of the egg.

It takes lots of shaming and coaxing to get the hens to lay eggs this cold weather, but they are worth the price after you do get them.

Hens with plenty of exercise and comfortable surroundings lay heavier eggs than those in restricted quarters; often eggs 10 per cent heavier.

Many Driven From Home. Every year in many parts of the country, thousands are driven from their homes by coughs and lung diseases. Soy Bean Meal for Dairy Cow.

Soy bean meal, made by grinding up the entire soy bean plant is giving excellent results as a feed for dairy cows on the farm of T. B. Foster, Warren county, Ohio. Mr. Foster, who is a graduate of the College of Agriculture, Ohio State University, raised over 20 acres of soy beans last season. A part of the crop was planted with corn and put into the silo. The remainder, following sweet corn, was allowed to ripen and ground into meal. This bean meal is being fed in the ration with corn and cob meal, cottonseed meal and distillers' grains. Mr. Foster expects to put out about 75 acres this coming season. According to present plans he will sow oats and Canada field peas as a soiling crop and then follow with the soy beans. It has over 300 acres of land and keeps about sixty head of Jersey cows from which he sells milk at retail in Cincinnati.—Ex.

WORK OF THE LEGISLATURE

All Records for Creating Offices Broken.

Some More Nice Fat Jobs In Sight for the Office Seekers.

Frankfort.—Jobs and then more jobs will be handed out by Gov. McCreary, with three more jobs by State Auditor Bosworth, as soon as the new laws passed by the legislature become effective. Most of these laws will be effective on and after June 15, and then the Governor will have his hands full handing out nice fat jobs paying from $2,000 to $2,500 each.

The legislature broke all records for creating new offices and in nearly every instance the power to make the appointments has been placed in the hands of the governor. That official now has more patronage at his disposal than any governor has had for the last half a century, more perhaps than Gov. McCreary had when he was in the governor's chair thirty-six years ago. When he was in office, Governor A. E. Wilson complained that the power of the governor had been lessened to such a degree that the governor could do nothing except send in messages and grant pardons. If Gov. Wilson was in office now he would not have any cause for complaint as the governor has places by the score to hand out to those who have been his friends.

There is much talk that most of the places at the disposal of the governor have been promised and it is the general rumor at the capital, that even places under the board of control have been promised. It is probable that there is only a small particle of truth in these rumors as Gov. McCreary is a careful and cautious man and politician. But it is certain that some of the jobs have been promised. This is not likely to prevent the usual horde of office-seekers from descending on the governor during the next ninety days and he will have his hands full, as full as he has had during the session of the legislature.

Three prison commissioners are to be appointed by the governor and more interest is shown in these appointments than in any others, of account of the immense amount of patronage that is at the disposal of the commission. Scores of guards, deputies and wardens are to be appointed at the prisons and School of Reform and it is predicted that there will be a general shaking up that will leave only a few of the men in positions which they now hold. Joe Pugh, of Covington, formerly chief of police, is almost certain to be warden of the Frankfort penitentiary and that will let out Col. E. E. Mudd, who has served for years.

The administration lost its first and only fight during the session when the legislature refused to pass the bill creating a public utilities commission to have charge of the telegraph, telephone and express companies and all corporations of a semi-public nature. The real administration consisting of the State officials, was split on this measure and it was called an administration measure, because the governor was very anxious to have it passed. He was so anxious, in fact, that he took a personal hand in the fight in the house and on the day that the bill was brought up, sent for nearly every member of the house and told him he must vote for the bill.

It was the only time during the session that the governor lost a fight to pass or defeat a bill. His power during the session was great and he used it in many measures. But he was unable to put over the utilities bill. Henry Bosworth, state auditor, was the leader of the fight against the bill and he was ably assisted, as a matter of course, by the corporations in general, who were opposing the act. Mr. Bosworth was against the bill because it would have ripped his office to pieces and cut down the income of his office, for clerk hire, to such an extent that he would have had to drop several clerks from his office.

Dr. C. F. Creelius, secretary of state, also opposed the bill, as it would have required him to drop one or two of the clerks in his office. Dr. Creelius was facing a hard problem anyhow, as the creation of the banking department reduced the fees in his office to the point where he could have only kept two clerks and would have had to give up his stenographer. However, a special act appropriating money for the secretary of state's office saved him.

The fight on the utilities bill was the liveliest of the session and everybody was surprised that it was defeated by a overwhelming vote. It showed how powerful Mr. Bosworth is. The governor took the defeat of the bill with much dissatisfaction and was rather much inclined to be "sour" as was shown by the fact that he gave out an interview on the subject. He said the bill was a Democratic platform measure and therefore he had expected the measure to be passed. The fight on the bill by Mr. Bosworth has not caused any breach between him and the governor, however, and they are working together as ever.

I will have on hand a car load of the celebrated Fish Guano for corn, tobacco and other crops. Place your orders with me early and receive a good discount. It will pay you to see me before purchasing elsewhere. L. T. CLORE, Burlington, Ky.

When Politicians Fall Out

When politicians fall out honest voters get their news from morning newspapers brings forth an exchange of damaging allegations from the Taft and Roosevelt publicity bureaus. According to each distinguished candidate the other distinguished candidate is just about the type of distinguished citizen that David Harum said abounded—just honest enough to keep out of jail. President Taft, in the view of one corps of allegators, is using his power as a President and the possible next President, to round up delegates, and his conduct is unbecoming a statesman and a gentleman. Col. Roosevelt, in the view of the other corps of allegators, is a creature of J. P. Morgan, who is attempting to hornswoggle the guileless farmers while helping himself liberally to the bounty of the criminal rich. And with each general allegation comes a bill of particulars that must exercise a saddening effect upon the voters.

But if these assertions are true the estimates of character boasted by each of the candidates cannot reasonably be assumed to be based upon discoveries made upon the one hand by President Taft after Col. Roosevelt shied his hat into the ring, and discoveries made by Col. Roosevelt after, or just prior to his learning from the columns of the Outlook that he did not mean it when he said that under no circumstances would he seek or accept another nomination! It must be inferred that each of the gentlemen now so hotly engaged in mud-slinging must know something about the methods of the other for a good while. President Taft must have known that "Dear Theodore" was in league with the powers of darkness, and the power of dollars, when he hoped that he would stand hitched and supported in the nomination. Col. Roosevelt must have known all along that "Dear Will" was not an upright Judge who would make a bang-up President, but a downright trickster who would make all sorts of dishonest efforts to hang on after once getting the presidency and the patronage in his dutches!

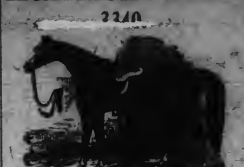

The average voter, reading the outpourings of the two bureaus, would be warranted in asking, in the language of a character in one of the plays of Shakespeare: "Is there any virtue extant save that which I possess?"—C. J.

How Cold Causes Kidney Diseases

Partly by driving blood from the surface and congesting the kidneys, and partly by throwing too much work upon them. Foley's Kidney Pills strengthen the kidneys, give tone to the urinary organs and restore action of the bladder. They are tonic in action, quick in results. Try them. For sale at Jones' drug store, Walton, Ky.

A thin neck may be rounded out and improved by taking the following exercises: Bend the head slowly forward until the chin touches the chest, then bend slowly backward. Repeat several times, change to side movement, bending the head first to the left and then to the right. Finish the exercise by slowly rotating the head. Repeat each exercise several times. Massaging with cocoa butter will also aid in the development.

The use of glycerine on the face will not cause a growth of hair, but in some cases too constant use of cold creams will cause a slight down to appear.

CLIFFORD VICTOR

Knocked from Top of Q. & C. Train and Instantly Killed.

Train Passes Over Body But Not Badly Mangled.

Clifford Victor, son of Alonzo Victor, a prominent contractor and builder at Erlanger, was killed at 4:10 p. m., last Monday, at Blanchet, a station on the Q. & C. Railroad in Grant county, forty miles from Cincinnati. The unfortunate man was special brakeman on a south bound freight train which was switching cars at Blanchet, when a mischievous shelling car, was made and the car knocked him from the top of a box car striking on his head, death resulting instantly. The train passed over the body but it remained between the wheels and was not mangled. One arm was mangled considerably but that resulted from the fall. The north bound passenger train arrived at Blanchet a few minutes after the accident, and the body was put aboard and shipped back to Erlanger, preceded by a telegram informing his family of the sad fate of the son.

Clifford Victor was twenty-seven years old, and had been engaged as a brakeman on the Q. & C. for about three years and was to be promoted to the position of conductor in the next few weeks. He was one of a family of four sons and one sister, all of whom were raised in Erlanger, to which town their parents came when it had but few inhabitants. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him, and his sudden taking off was a shock to the town the like of which it never before experienced.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

1. That any indigent, disabled person who has been a citizen and an actual bona fide resident of this State continuously and uninterruptedly from the 1st of January 1, 1867, and who actually served one year or until the close of the war, as an officer or enlisted man in the military or naval service of the Confederate States of America during the war of 1861 to 1865, or their widow, to whom the soldier was married prior to January 1, one thousand eight hundred and ninety, shall be paid out of the State Treasury the sum of ten dollars per month upon due proof of the facts according to form and regulations prescribed by this act and subject to the restrictions and conditions provided therein: Provided, That any person who was prevented from so serving until the close of the war by reason of wounds incurred or disease contracted in line of duty in such service, or by reason of being incapacitated, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act, and, provided, further, that any person who deserted or was dishonorably discharged from said service shall not be entitled to the benefits of this act, unless he re-enlisted or returned to said service and served thereafter one year or until the close of the war, or was prevented from doing so by reason of wounds, disease or in capacity, as before stated.

2. No person shall be entitled to the benefits of this act: Who is able to earn a support by manual labor; or who is able to earn a support by reason of his knowledge or skill in any profession, trade or craft; or who receives a pension from the United States, or any State or foreign government; or who is removed from this State or is absent therefrom for a period of one year; or who possesses an income of the amount of $300 per year; or who has property of the value of two thousand five hundred dollars; or who is living with his wife, who possesses property or income sufficient for the suitable support of himself and family, including her husband; or whose support is suitably provided for and secured by reason of a contract or agreement for a valuable consideration, with a person able to provide such support; or who, by reason of the combined partial ability to earn a support and income or property or any or all of these combined, is able to obtain an income equivalent to $300 per year.

3. The Governor, Auditor and Secretary of State shall constitute the State Pension Board, who shall examine and grant or reject applications for pensions, and their decision shall be final. The Pension Board shall prescribe such regulations governing the filing, prosecution, adjudicating and payment of pension claims as may be necessary for the proper carrying out of the provisions of this act.

4. Applications for pensions shall be made in duplicate under oath, substantially in form prescribed by the State Pension Board and shall be attested by two reputable witnesses as to the identity of the applicant. The application shall be filed in the County Court of the county where the claimant resides on or before any regular term, say over until a subsequent regular term of said court, when the judge thereof shall hear testimony in open court as to applicant's citizenship, residence and his means of support. The County Attorney shall be present and represent the Commonwealth; and may produce evidence concerning any facts relative to the claim. The judge of said court shall make a finding of facts in evidence, and forward with a brief memorandum of the substance of the testimony of each witness heard, with his name and residence, and together with his recommendation upon the merits of the claim, and a copy of the application, to the Adjutant General of the State. The duplicate application shall remain on file in the County Clerk's office. The application may be continued from time to time upon motion of the claimant, but shall not be continued more than once over the objections of claimant.

5. The application for pension shall be accompanied by affidavits of two physicians or one physician and two lay witnesses as to claimant's inability to earn a support by manual labor wholly or in part, and the County Judge shall certify whether such witnesses are reputable, and entitled to credit.

6. Upon receipt of an application for pension properly executed, the Adjutant General shall cause the claimant's military record to be examined, and a report thereon shall be filed with the papers in the case. The findings and recommendations of the County Judge shall not be final or conclusive upon any of the issues, but the Adjutant General may call upon the applicant for additional evidence covering any necessary to support the claim.

7. When the claimant shall have furnished all the evidence called for by the Adjutant General, and cleared his inability to earn any additional evidence, the claim shall then be submitted to the State Pension Board with the Adjutant General's recommendations endorsed thereon, for final action.

8. When any pension shall be allowed, the Adjutant General shall issue to the applicant a pension certificate at the rate of ten dollars per month from the date of filing the application with the Adjutant General. Payment shall be made on said certificate four times each year; on the 1st day of August, November, February, and May upon the proper execution of vouchers by the pensioner before an official authorized to administer oaths. He shall then prepare the pension roll for that quarter, with the postoffice address of each pensioner, and file same together with the vouchers with the Auditor. The Auditor shall then issue his warrants upon the Treasurer for the respective sums and the Treasurer shall forward a treasury check to the address of the pensioner.

13. Once each year every pensioner under this act shall furnish in addition to the usual voucher, a certificate from the County Judge of the county where he resides to the effect that he is the holder of the pension certificate, is the identical person to whom the same was issued, and that to the best of his belief there has occurred no changes in his financial condition which would entitle the pensioner ineligible to receive the pension.

14. When in the opinion of the State Board of Pensions any pension hereafter granted, or any claim for same, should be specially investigated, it shall be the duty of the Governor to direct the State Inspector and the Auditor to make such investigation of same as requested by the State Board of Pensions, and report in writing the results thereof to said board.

15. The State Pension Board shall furnish to any Confederate Soldier of this State blank applications for pensions upon application to him for same.

16. No official fees shall be charged by any officer of the county of State for services in connection with the prosecution or collection of any pension under this act: Provided, That this section shall not apply to notaries public.

17. The Adjutant General shall, every two years, make and publish a report showing the names county and postoffice address of each pensioner under this act. Copies thereof shall be furnished to the County Judge, County Attorney, County Clerk, and Sheriff of each county.

18. In any case where pensions have been granted, if the State Pension Board finds that the pension was wrongfully granted, or that the pensioner under this act is no longer entitled to the pension thereto, they shall have the authority to drop said pensioner from the rolls after first giving him thirty days notice by registered mail, and hearing any evidence the pensioner may offer.

19. In case any person drawing a pension under this act enters the Confederate Honor, he shall not receive any pension for the time he remains there.

20. Approved March 11, 1919.

The new county of McCreary was created in the waning days of legislature out of sections of the counties of Wayne, Powell and Whitley, making 120 counties in the State.

State Auditor Bosworth says the whole trouble over the nonpayment of the school teachers resulted from the fact that the estimate of the amount to be paid is made as of the whole year and not for any one month. He says that the whole year is closed the teachers will all be paid and there will be a surplus to the school fund but that at this particular time not enough money is in to pay the school teachers, although there will be more than enough before the fiscal year closes.

The train will be taken to the doors of the people, and will accommodate the thirty or more people who will be on the train, there will be six lecturers, devoted to the various lines of agriculture, fitted up with extensive illustrative of the topics of the lectures. The World's Supply of Coal.
Detailed statistics of estimates of the world's supply of coal ready for the mining assure us that there is enough in the ground to supply us for a thousand years to come. This is an improvement upon former and rather discouraging estimates. But if men are not to be induced to engage in mining there will be no use for the figures for our comfort in the future of the world. Editor Steele's gloomy prediction, printed in the Enquirer just before the great strike broke out in England, seems to have been accented by numerous other editors in the British press, some of whom are calling on their Government to take steps that shall force an agreement between miners and operators in order that the awful prospect of paralysis of industries and human life may be avoided. Some of them point to the facts in connection with Government control of situations in other countries of Europe in emergencies arising out of strikes, as in France, Portugal and others.

In the United States there would be mined this year to supply the demands nearly five hundred millions of tons of coal; say four hundred millions of tons of bituminous coal and one hundred millions of anthracite. These enormous figures tell of the movement of all the wheels of industry except those to which electricity is supplied by land, river, sea and lake; of work in all the factories.

Without coal must come starvation to the masses. In no country is there ever a supply of more than two weeks above ground. We are vitally interested in this question of the mining of the coal. Surely there ought to be, as between the men who wield the pick and those who employ them, possibility of speedily reaching an agreement as to terms of service. Particularly should this come about in view of the fact that the bill will have to be footed by the world at large.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Last week while Mr. W. K. Cardwell was cleaning out a culvert on his place a rabbit ran out and started across the lot. In the lot were some hogs, which, on catching sight of bunny started in pursuit. Across the lot they went at full tilt, and just as the rabbit started thru the fence a 300 pounder grabbed him by the hind foot and pulled him back. The whole bunch went in, and soon there was another side nor hair left of the poor bunny. From the grunting it was evident that the hog enjoyed the meal immensely.—Farmers Leader.

Orchard Pruning.

If not previously given attention the present month affords one of the best opportunities to give to the orchard a needed pruning.

Pruning. If done annually the pruning will usually be a light one, but in perhaps a majority of orchards in Kentucky, the work is neglected from year to year until more radical treatment may be necessary. In trees thus neglected in which little recent growth has been made and with lowered vitality, a vigorous winter pruning tends to quicken the activities of the tree, and if followed by feeding, cultivation, and spraying will often bring such trees into a profitable bearing condition within a short time.

A tree, however, already growing vigorously will require pruning somewhat guardedly, as a severe pruning at this season will often result in a rank growth of water sprouts during the spring and summer. Any such overgrowth of tree when seen in a mature specimen is usually due to a strong soil, thorough tilling or over manuring, and may usually be checked by withholding tillage and manure and seeding down for a while.

In one of its fundamental objects pruning is not materially unlike the purpose of a farmer when, in his corn field, by replanting or by thinning he tries to secure a uniform stand of plants, neither is it inferior to many stunts in the corn field, leading to the kind of corn, fertility of the land, purposes of the crop and other conditions.

So in a tree top it is important, among other things, for the largest production of fruit that there should be a full "stand" of branches, forming a round, full-headed tree, with such modifications of form as are characteristic of the variety, well filled on all sides, yet no where so crowded as to prevent the free circulation of air and liberal admission of light.

The most common error in the practice of pruning is in putting a branch several inches out from the main stem upon which it grew. Frequently this pruning is done with an axe, leaving stubs three to six inches long. This is a ruinous practice, for the long stub cannot be covered over with new healing tissue, and in a few years decay will be started in this spur and soon travel down into the main branch or trunk of the tree; finally resulting in a rotten hearted or hollow tree, a delightful place while it lasts for the woodpeckers to nest, but soon destined to be broken down in a gale of wind or a sleet storm. Thousands of apple and other trees in Kentucky have been brought to an untimely end through such careless methods of pruning, as witnessed in orchards all over the State.

The orchard is no place for an axman. Let him stay in the wood lot.

In removing the branch of a tree it is of great importance to saw it off close to the branch or trunk upon which it was growing. If it is a large and heavy branch, first make an undercut upon the lower side of the limb, then saw it off close to the upper side so that in falling away the branch may not tear off a strip of wood and bark, leaving a ragged wound upon the main branch. The cut should be more than an inch across, should be brushed with paint or some similar material to prevent decay starting in the wood before it has time to become healed over.

Pruning, however, is only one of several practices needed in most Kentucky orchards, and should be followed by spraying, by fertilizing and by tillage.

Professor of Horticulture and Botany.

CARROLL COUNTY.

(Carrolltown News.)
Miss Carolyn Moreland, of this city, has consented after being importuned for some time, to become a candidate for county school superintendent, subject, of course, to the action of the Democratic party, as she is one of the strongest instilled Democrats in Kentucky.

The Carrolltown loose leaf market ruled last week, a noticeable advance being shown on all grades, under heavy sales. Tobacco continues to come in lively, but it cannot last much longer, as the major part of the crop has been marketed, and not over one fourth is yet to come.

The farmers of the Ghent vicinity formed a lamb pool last Saturday and Wm. Duiguid was elected president, and Geo. L. Cook secretary. A selling committee was appointed.

According to information just made public by the director of the office of public roads, Indiana leads all the states of the union in mileage of improved roads. Most of the improved roads of Indiana and Ohio are composed of gravel, and were, for the most part, built by the farmers in working out the taxes. Indiana in 1904 had 23,877 miles of roads against 23,460 miles in Ohio, her nearest competitor. Other states, however, are doing better road building now than is Indiana, but that is explained—perhaps by the fact that nearly all roads in this State have been improved.

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

is a story of humor and dramatic thrills. Stirring and laughable scenes alternate along its shores like the whirlpools and eddies of a mountain stream. The court scene at Balaam's Cross Roads is a joy, the fight at Slosson's Tavern a thriller, the Judge's jail-breaking a comedy, the surprise at the church door a tragedy, the final climax a whirl of excitement.

Do Not Miss the Opening Chapter

Multi-Millionaire Charity.

In speaking of the immense sums that multi-millionaires have given to education and charity a paper quite recently complained that the public does not seem very grateful. Common experience proves that as a rule people are grateful for benefits received, and if in this instance not very much is felt it is because the public has its suspicion that most of the enormous wealth that makes such gifts possible was not honestly attained. The public also feels that if the price of many commodities now controlled by trusts were lowered and workmen, especially in the great steel mills, had shorter hours and better wages there might not be so much money for charity, and that neither would there be so much need for charity. Also it is well to remember that the lowly commodities given to charity by people in humble circumstances may and do represent far more sacrifice than all the millions of oil kings and steel magnates. In this connection it is well to reflect upon what Christ said about the rich men giving "of their abundance" and the two mites of the widow. The public is not unappreciative of the large gifts but it declines to get wildly enthusiastic.

Was Just Right.

An old gentleman from the back part of the county came into town the other day riding a splendid horse. He was accosted on the street by someone who wanted to buy his horse. After some dickering a trade was made the price agreed on being $200. The buyer wanted to give a check, but the old gentleman would not have it. The buyer then went to the Union bank and procured two bright new hundred-dollar bills. The old gentleman was well pleased, but he wanted some change. After trying a number of the merchants and failing to get it, he walked into the Union Bank and presented one of his bills and asked for change. The cashier being very busy with a customer, the genial bookkeeper counted out his change with the rapidity of one accustomed to handling money, and pushed it toward the old gentleman, who gazed for a moment at the pile, and then said: "Young man, are you sure it's all there?" "Count for yourself," said the bookkeeper. "I think you'll find it right."

The bookkeeper then stood patiently by while the old man laboriously counted the tens, the fives, the twos, the ones the halves, the quarters, the dimes the nickels and even coppers. Finally he looked up and said: "Yes, it's all right; but you be careful, young man; it just is right!"—Whitesburg News.

A cow belonging to G. W. Sandford mired in the pasture, one day last week. She was discovered about night and it took him and several of his neighbors until nine o'clock at night to release her from the mire.

H. W. Elliott will preach at the Christian church, Saturday night Sunday morning and Sunday night. A cordial invitation is extended to all of whatever denomination to attend these services. Two elders and two deacons will be ordained at the Sunday morning services.

The Confederate Pension Law enacted by the last General Assembly appears elsewhere in the Recorder. Many of the old soldiers have nothing good to say of the law, and only a few of them are eligible to a pension under its provisions.

As G. W. Sandford, who lives a mile and a quarter out on the East Bend road, was coming to town, one day last week, the horse he was riding, foot fastened in the mud and fell, throwing his rider, who had some trouble pulling himself out of the sticky clay. Mr. Sandford says he came very nearly making remarks about the roads that would not look well in print.

The "Child's Welfare" movement has challenged the attention of thoughtful people everywhere. Mothers are natural supporters, and in Fannie's Honey and Tar Compound is most valuable aid. Coughs and colds that unchecked lead to croup, bronchitis and pneumonia yield quickly to the healing and soothing qualities of Fannie's Honey and Tar Compound. For sale at Jones' drug store, Walton, Ky.

It took Elmer Conley, carrier on Burlington R. D. 2 all day last Friday to make his rounds. He had his horse and cart with him, but he walked the whole route, and was about worn out when he reached the Burlington office about night. He says he never before saw the condition as they have been this spring. They are not bad in spots but have been dangerous for nearly their entire distance. He has had his salary this winter for sure.

Persons who have made an examination of the shrubs and vines declare that there has not been greatly injured by the hard winter. They say that the heavy snows have protected the vines. One expert says a simple test may be used by any body to determine just what damage has been done. A twig or shoot may be placed in hot water and if it still has a little life it will respond to the warmth. Shrubs and vines that have been protected during the winter are said to have suffered. W. R. Rouse Dead.

W. R. Rouse, a prominent citizen of the Boone neighborhood, died at his home near that town, last Friday morning aged 51 years. He had been afflicted with creeping paralysis for several months, but was able to go to Cincinnati only a day or two before his death. He was a son of the late Llewellyn Rouse and is survived by wife and one brother, Israel Rouse. Mr. Rouse spent many years of his life in Lumburg neighborhood, where he owned and operated the saw and grist mill. He was an excellent business man and a leading spirit in every enterprise that was undertaken. He was a generous and a kind hearted man, and was well liked by all who knew him. His funeral took place last Monday at Hebron in the presence of a large crowd of friends and relatives, all of whom sympathize with the grief-stricken widow.

Letter of Condolence.

My dear Mrs. Hogan:
Lizzie, from a little child, has been an especial object of my affection, hence, take the liberty to intrude on your sorrow, and to ask you to let me share your grief. Early yesterday I heard that she was gone, and I cannot tell you what sadness has filled my heart since. She was so sweet, lovely, a girl and womanly as a wife and mother. I have always had a love for her. We did not meet often in later years but when we did, I believe our gladness was mutual. Our treasures in heaven increase and dear Lizzie will certainly "shine as the stars."

Your Friend,
Nannie B. Frazier.

Who Pays the Freight?

The acts past by the last General Assembly are now before the people, and a review of them is causing considerable unfavorable comment, there appearing too many acts establishing new offices with full salaries attached, while the increase in appropriations for the benefit of State institutions is not calculated to please those who have to foot the bill. The State fair, it will be seen, was remembered in a most generous manner by the lawmakers. While the State Fair is intended as an advertisement of Kentucky and her various products of all kinds, a very small percent of the people of the State receive any benefit therefrom, and a majority not satisfied that the fair is worth the money it costs.

Taking the aggregate of the appropriations made by the last legislature as a witness, it is evident that the body was composed of very liberal men, especially when it comes to dealing with the public funds. If Governor McCreary proves himself able to meet the obligations imposed upon the State by the recent legislature he will make for himself a place in history as one of the greatest financiers ever known in this country. The legislature provided no way for him to meet the additional appropriations the amount of which is thousands of dollars in excess of the amount raised by State taxes.

Five Minutes' Trial and Sentence. Baltimore, Md.—Emmons Waller, a negro, who assaulted Ella Bailey, the pretty 16-year-old daughter of Justice of the Peace W. H. H. Bailey, of Hebron, Md., and who was taken to the jail at Salisbury to prevent lynching, is now in the Maryland penitentiary in this city, serving a term of 10 years.

The authorities at Salisbury, anticipating trouble, had the grand jury indict Waller. Then Judges Stanford and Jones appointed counsel for Waller, who immediately pleaded guilty. He was convicted and sentence imposed, five minutes elapsing during the entire procedure. Waller was then hustled into an auto and carried to a train for Baltimore.

The Fine High Bred Percheron Stallion,

PRINCE OLSEN

Will make the season of 1912 at my farm two miles west of Walton, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a living colt. Persons parting with mares forfeit the insurance money. A hen retained on colt until season money is paid.

PRINCE OLSEN was foaled in 1907, and is one model of his class. He weighs 1550 pounds and is nearly 17 hands in height. He is a beautiful black, and is a picture of symmetry and fine points of the draft horse. His breeding qualities are excellent.

PRINCE OLSEN was sired by Blackmon, a registered Percheron stallion owned by Ole G. Olsen, of Shabbona Grove, Illinois, where he was foaled in 1907, and from whom he was purchased by me last spring, selecting this horse over many others because of his excellent qualities. Prince Olsen is eligible to registry, and is one of the highest bred draft horses ever in this section of the country. The dam of Prince Olsen was a high bred registered Percheron mare. I feel that farmers and breeders will make no mistake in breeding to Prince Olsen as it means a good, strong colt that will meet every requirement on the farm. One of the lacking features of our horses has been noted at $105 at weaning time. These essentials are fully incorporated.

Come and see the horse and inspect his good points and you will breed to him.

Also at the same place and under the same conditions I will offer for public service my two fine breeding jacks.

BEN

is a black Jack with mealy points, six years old, 15.5 hands high, large bone and big body, very long ear, and has proven himself to be one of the best breeders in Kentucky. His mules are quick sellers and several have been sold at $105 at weaning time. His service fee will be $10.

DEWEY

is another fine Jack, four years old and a half brother to Ben. His fee will be $10.

Both Jacks are high in class, and are excellent breeders. Take a look at them before breeding. It may pay you.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents but I will not be responsible should any occur.

JOSEPH READNOUR, Walton, Ky.

Stephens on the Lexington pike. Robert McCullom will return home this week after a two month's stay at Durant, Okla., where he improved greatly in health. The untimely death of Clifford Victor on the 25th ult., cast an unprecedented gloom over the town of Erlanger. In perfect health, in the prime of life, he was summoned without warning to stand before the上帝, and his death was a great loss to the community. He was one of five stalwart sons and one daughter. The first break in the ranks of the Victor family, and to those who were loved and respected does not express the true spirit that surrounded his unfortunate death. This seven large and beautiful floral offerings were but a feeble attempt to express the love and grief of his many friends. But why was this young man so highly respected? He was not a public man; the leader of a great people, or the possessor of great wealth. He filled his life as an ordinary man in life. Why was he so highly respected? Simply this, Clifford Victor had a clean record and a good name. Oh! precious sentence, what a blessing you are to the gray haired mother and the aged father, whose untiring efforts and faithful hands nurtured this young man when he was unable to do for himself. What a blessing and comfort when these parents look over the rank and find that while one is missing he has left a "Clean Record and a Good Name."

Father, mother, sister brothers some day death will make us all one. The only thing of value there will be the life we have lived—that and that alone will distinguish us one from another, and may our friends be proud of us as we are of your son, "Clifford left a Clean Record and a Good Name."

The Sunday school at Hopeful will be reorganized next Sunday at 10 a. m. Everybody is invited to attend. After a visit of two weeks with friends in this neighborhood, Mrs. Lizzie Bartlett returned to her home in Florence, last Monday.

We were very sorry to hear of the death of W. R. Rouse, of Hebron. For a number of years he was a correspondent and a coworker of this paper, and his death is a great loss to the Boone Co. Church. He was an officer of the church. He was a devoted husband and father, and his death is a great loss to the Boone Co. Church. Saved By His Wife. She's a wise woman who knows just what to do when her husband is in the hospital, but Mrs. R. J. Flint, Braintree, Vt. is of that kind. "She insisted on my using Dr. King's New Discovery," she says, "and I was so weak my friends all thought I had only a short time to live, and it completely cured me."

Dr. King's New Discovery, it's the most safe and reliable medicine for many throat and lung troubles—grip, whooping cough, tonsillitis, hemorrhages. A trial will convince you. Sold by all dealers. Guaranteed by all dealers.

A woman went into a newspaper office and asked the editor how much it would cost to advertise for her lost husband. On being told the rate would be two dollars an inch she replied she could not afford it, as her husband was six feet tall.

BELLEVIEW.

Mary Susan Staley, daughter of Martin and Catherine Staley, was born Nov. 24, 1876; was united in marriage to Warren T. Flick, Sept. 19th, 1892. To this union were born three sons, who, with the husband, remain to mourn the death of a dear wife and mother. She departed this life Sunday evening, March 17th, 1912. It is hard earth's last parting, but there is a remaining, all does not go. There are blessed memories and sweet relics still in our hands, still sleeping in our bosoms. Beauty, holiness and love are never sick; for them there is no funeral bell. No! Death has not the power of forever severing souls that have been linked here in sweet and tender bonds—that together have raised smiling faces in the glowing rays of prosperity's sun, and, finding hand in hand, have trodden the stormy pathway of adversity, affliction and pain. There is no death for such trusting spirits. The cold grave clouds may indeed, cover the inanimate form, the once beautiful receptacle of the sweet soul, but in the blessed light of inspiring faith and hope we can joyfully exclaim, "Not here, but risen!" The funeral services were conducted at the grave by Bro. R. Kimble, Tuesday afternoon at 1 o'clock. Burial in the new cemetery at Bellevue. Mazella Flick.

WALTON.

E. K. Stephens spent Tuesday in Cincinnati on business for his store. James McCormick, of near Verona, spent yesterday here on business. Geo. Kipp, of Cincinnati, spent Sunday here with his father, Jacob Kipp. J. W. Couell has secured a position as clerk in the First National Bank, Cincinnati. Mrs. Carrie Ault, of Indianapolis, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Chas. H. Fox.

W. P. Kinman and family have moved to Sparta, Gallatin county, where he purchased the Sparta farm. Miss Sybil Hurt spent Saturday in Cincinnati and Sunday at Mrs. Deakins' Rust.

Mrs. Mollie Ford spent last week in Cincinnati, the guest of her son, Claud E. and wife, and is now visiting relatives at Verona.

Nora Belle Franks, little daughter of Ollie Franks, of near Florence, is dangerously ill of pertussis. As at the home of W. C. Coxley, where she is now recovering.

John B. Allison, of Gardner, Illinois, who is attending school at Hanover, Indiana, is spending the winter at the home of Dr. B. K. Menefee and family.

SCHOOL NOTES.

The names of pupils of Crittenden and Independence schools who are interested in the Tournament, have been received. These schools have a nice list of contestants. About 20 will come from each school.

The boys of the school are to add the school house yard this week. Keep your eyes on us when we do. Brother Andrew Johnson and Bro. Martin paid a visit last Thursday. Bro. Martin conducted our devotional exercises and Bro. Johnson gave an interesting talk. We hope to see them in our chapel again before the revival closes. Any visitors to chapel will be welcomed any time. The base ball suits will be ordered this week.

A large percentage of the High School observed April fool day with appropriate exercises, viz: By sending themselves from school Monday afternoon and bringing on themselves the blessing of receiving twice as many hours tuition as they were absent. Who was fooled?

THE POPULARITY CONTEST.

Miss Eva Seabrook has withdrawn from the popularity contest. Three young women ladies have been put in nomination since last week—Miss Edna Beall, of Franksville, Estelle Huey, of Commissionville, and Fannie Underhill, of Beaver. Considerable interest was manifested in the contest last Monday, even by persons who have not voted. About everybody in the county will vote before the contest closes if indications are reliable.

The new entries in the contest this week made a fine start. Misses Alice Carver and Edith Huey are the leading contestants this week, and as a result three of the young ladies are running a close race.

We verify that we counted the votes cast in the Boone Co. Recorder Popularity Contest to noon, Wednesday, April 3rd 1912 and find it as follows:

SECTION No. 1.
Miss Alice Carver—49,600
Miss Lizzie McElgish—10,000

Miss Fannie Underhill—1,000

SECTION No. 2.
Miss Edith Huey—31,750
Miss Lena Tanner—10,500

Mrs. C. M. Baldon Dead.

Mrs. C. M. Baldon, nee Duncan, died at her home in Burlington at 8:30 p. m. last Saturday, after an illness of several months, heart trouble being the immediate cause of her death. She was a daughter of J. W. and Louann Graves Duncan, and had an extensive acquaintance, she having served most efficiently as deputy clerk under both her father, James W. Duncan, and her brother, James A. Duncan, the incumbent. She was long a prominent member of the Burlington Baptist church, where her funeral was conducted at 11 a. m. last Monday by Rev. H. C. Wayman, of Walton, in the presence of a large concourse of friends and relatives.

Mrs. Baldon is survived by her husband C. M. Baldon, to whom she was married in 1907, and two brothers, Dr. E. W. and John P. Duncan, and a sister, Mrs. R. A. Brady and James A. Duncan.

Mrs. Baldon's mother died when she was yet a child, but she proved herself equal to her domestic responsibilities that devolved upon her as her father's housekeeper, and ever after her leading ambition was to make his a comfortable and happy home. She was a most dutiful child and wife and a great comfort to her aged parent in his declining years.

To the husband, who is deprived of a faithful helpmate and a safe counselor, and to the father who has lost the one who has been his life, goes the tenderest of sympathy on the part of all. The pall-bearers were Earl Smith, Irvin Rus, Elbert Clure, Newton Sullivan, Grover H. Smith and Lewis Edinger. The remains were placed in the vault in the Odd-Fellows cemetery, and will finally be interred in the family lot in the Burlington Baptist church cemetery.

One of the most striking incidents of the late remarkable winter was that of its last night, Wednesday, the 28th, when a rain of cold water fell over all central Indiana, coating the trees, shrubs, grass, telephone and telegraph wires, everything with ice. We say the late winter, for it was not March, but March 21 is the dividing day, and we have had enough of such a winter. Many shade and fruit trees are dead or nearly dead. The heavy loads of ice were broken down, or lost many of their limbs. The poplars and soft maples suffered most. The street cars in the city and great trouble in making their runs, the ice preventing the trolley wheels from coming in contact with the wires. Six or eight cars were sometimes bunched together on this account. It was the worst time ever known here in this respect.—Indiana Farmer.

On Sunday morning the lifeless body of Dr. Wilson H. Swales, a highly respected and well known physician of Logan was found on the highway near the residence of Mr. Owen Spelman. How he met his death is a mystery, but it is supposed that he was seized with heart failure and fell from his buggy driving by the roadside. He had been in the city for some time and was on his way home driving a team of Indiana ponies. They were found in the barnyard of his residence Sunday morning. Dr. Swales was well known especially in the upper part of Dearborn county, having served as Coroner for one term.—Aurora Bulletin.

Clarkburg, Ky., W. J. Bellamy gives particulars of his son's recovery. He says: "My boy of sixteen had bronchial trouble, ever since his young days, and he gradually grew worse until we feared consumption. I got a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and soon there was such a marked improvement that I got a second bottle and this will, I think, make a permanent cure. The first bottle cured his stubborn cough, and I think this wonderful medicine saved my boy's life." For sale at Jones Drug Store, Walton, Ky. X

The North American Indian usually makes his pipes out of a kind of stone known as red pipe stone, of which there were large deposits in the old Sioux country, and the Great Spirit is said to have given the element to this particular material, which might have been a Sioux monopoly, in these words: "This stone I give you, my baby, it belongs to you all. Out of it make no more tomahawks, war hatchets, nor scalping knives. Use it only to make the pipe of peace and smoke the pipe of prayer. It would propitiate me and do my will."

The "NOBLE OUTCAST" one of the most popular plays ever produced will be given Saturday night, April 30th, at Library Hall, followed by a laughable farce, entitled "Blundering Bill."

Congressman A. B. Rouse was a member of the Congressional Committee that accompanied the remains of Senator Carl T. Hayden to Kentucky, Tenn., last September.

OLLIE JAMES.

To be Temporary Chairman of the National Democratic Convention.

Frankfort—Big Ollie James, Congressman from Boone Co., District, and U. S. Senator from the State, was elected great honor of being chosen Chairman of the Democratic National convention when it meets in Baltimore, this summer. Candidates for President and Vice-President.

This was the tip received straight from the subcommittee of the Democratic national committee, which names the place of the convention. It is a great honor to be chosen as the right hand man of William Jennings Bryan. The election will be a significant one. It is one of the highest honors that can come to a party as to the temporary chairman, the duty of making the really the key-note of the convention. It is a great honor that if James gets the election will make the speech of the hour.

Interest Increased.

The reports sent out by Washington by the Department of Agriculture in the volume of the phosphate around Midway has created much interest in the phosphate and has greatly encouraged those farmers such as have been found. The plant of the Lexington Phosphate Company, near Midway, has been doing a business, which will be largely increased with the coming better season. The phosphate is a really a ready sale manufactured product. It has been unable to supply the demand. The plant will be from time to time in operation, and all the business is coming to it. The phosphate found here is of especially quality, which, created a demand for it as a commercial fertilizer.—Blue-Grass Clipper.

The fancy prices which tobacco has been bringing for the last two or three months have led to inspire a crop of tobacco on the part of the farmers to pitch a largely increased quantity of tobacco. The cause of the increased season for preparation. The absolutely high price of tobacco is bringing a large number of farmers to consider the tobacco business, to say nothing of the trouble it is giving the tobacco grower. The tobacco grower is generally a poor man, and the tobacco which the owners of tobacco in this county for the quarter of a century have really been producing. Financially if the waste of timber and the destruction of the productive value of the land is taken into consideration. With food for the world, the present prices, the farmer should allow himself to be led by the tobacco market. He should bring, and find next to nothing so short on food for his livestock as to have to smoke tobacco money in order to maintain his horses, sheep, etc. These successful farmers in this part of the county are the ones who raise a diversified crop.

Almost every farm has a sort of a garden, but the majority have been regarded as careless and given but little attention to it. Some have never yielded anything to compare with a well-made garden. The trucking and market garden industry, while it has been a great thing in some sections, is as yet poorly developed in most of the South. Although the demand for first-class vegetables is almost everywhere satisfied.

With the proper understanding of the possibilities of gardening in adding to the success of farm life, and the profits to be made from market gardening, the South will no longer become noted as a land of cotton. The time has come when the real-garden to add to the old malleable garden, which in summer a little patch of wall and raising cress, and in fall afford a few colored turnips. The real garden will be a well-cared for plot of land where can be and where will grow a variety of vegetables through a long season.

The Tatt-Rodwell scrap growing out of their pangs for the Republican nomination for the president growing very interesting.

"I can wait," she sighed, gratefully. "Dickie, I can wait until it ends now."

Dick went back.

The hours passed. One more car went out of the race and the winning test; there were the usual incidents of blown-out tires and temporary withdrawals for repairs. Twice Mr. French sent his partner and Emily to the restaurant below, tolerating his seat. Perfectly composed, his expression perfectly self-contained, he watched his son.

The day grew unbearably hot toward afternoon, a heat rather of July than June. After a visit to his camp Lestrange reappeared without the suffocating mask and cap, driving bareheaded, with only the narrow goggles crossing his face. The change left visible the drawn pallor of exhaustion under stains of dust and oil; his rolled-back sleeves disclosed the crimson badge on his right arm and the fact that his left wrist was tightly wound with linen where swollen and strained muscles rebelled at the long trial.

"He's been driving for nineteen hours," said Dick, climbing up to his party through the excited crowd. "Two hours more to six o'clock. Listen to the mob when he passes!"

The injunction was unnecessary. As the sun slanted low the enthusiasm grew to fever. This was a crowd of connoisseurs—motorists, chauffeurs, automobile-lovers and drivers—they knew what was being done before them. The word passed that Lestrange was in his twentieth hour; people climbed on seats to cheer him as he passed by. When one of his tires blew out, in the opening of the first hour of his driving and the twenty-fourth of the race, the great shout of sympathy and encouragement that went up shook the grand-stand to its cement foundations.

Neither Lestrange nor Rupert left his seat while that tire was changed. "If we did I ain't sure we'd get back," Rupert explained to Dick, who unable to look toward the grand-stand he raised his hand in salute as he passed, to the one he knew was watching. Emily dashed rosy, her dark eyes warm and shining.

hovered around them agitatedly. "If I'd thought Darling's mechanic would get in for this, I'd have taken in sewing for a living. How much longer?"

"Half an hour."

"Well, watch us finish."

A renewed burst of applause greeted the Mercury car's return to the track. Men were standing with hands on the bulletin board where the reeled-off miles were being registered. Two of the other machines were fighting desperately for second place, hopeless of rivaling Lestrange, and after them came the rest.

"The finish!" some one suddenly called. "The last lap!"

Dick was hanging over the paddock fence when the car shot by amidst baying, klaxons, motor horns, cheers, and the clashing music of the band. Frantic, the people hailed Lestrange as the black and white checked flag of the Mercedes straight across the track the machine dashed, instead of following the bend, crashed through the barrier, and rolled over on its side in the green meadow grass.

"The steering-knuckle!" Bailey groaned, as the place burst into uproar around the wreck. "I saw it turn uselessly in his hands!"

"They're up!" cried a dozen voices. "No, one's up, and one's under." "Who's caught in the wreck—Lestrange or his man?"

But before the people who surged over the breaking will restraint, before the electric ambulance, Dick French reached the mangled thing that had been the Mercury car. It was Lestrange who had painfully struggled to one knee beside the machine, fighting hard for breath to speak.

"Take the car off Rupert," he panted, at Dick's cry of relief on seeing him. "I'm all right—take the car off Rupert!"

The next instant they were surrounded, overwhelmed with eager aid. The ambulance came up and a

CONVALESCENTS

Those Recovering from Any Severe Illness

After a long wasting illness, convalescents require nourishing food that will not overtax the digestive functions—and in the way of a strength-restoring and vitality-making tonic, we know of nothing that equals Vinol, our famous cod liver and iron tonic (without oil).

Vinol created an appetite, re-establishes good digestion and helps the daily food to make rich blood, form new, strong muscles and impart new life and vitality to every organ in the body. We ask those who need a strength and flesh-building tonic restorative to call at our store and get a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that if it does not help them we will refund their money without question.

Honest Shoes.

The duty of the public does not end with demanding "pure food," though that is a very important matter. It is not so generally known, though as certain, that a vast quantity of shoes on the market, both men and women's, are made of adulterated cheap stuff that defrauds the buyer and endangers his health. The feet must be protected from dampness and cold wet weather, as well as the stomach from the materials in shoe manufacture. A movement is now on foot to secure National legislation forbidding this, and the several States cannot move too quickly in the same direction. While there are millions of dollars of shoes on the market that are made of adulterated materials, it is a gratification that there are honorable manufacturers who adhere to honorable methods in manufacture. It is only a question of time when the public will understand that both the pocket and health are involved in this matter, but the reform must come by a fuller knowledge of the quality of things in relation to the fraudulent shoes on the market, and under a sense of our duty to the reader of this paper, we again sound the warning on the subject.

Manufacturers who put honest leather in the shoes they make, and whose products wear one-half longer than shoddy shoes, as well as the health involved, are large factors which must attract the public interest that will bring about the necessary reform.

WHY NOT PATRIOTS IN WAX?

Suggestion for Exhibitions of Effigies Comes From the Shows Common in England.

How many school children would recognize historical personages, other than perhaps Washington and Lincoln, if they met them face to face? A South Islander recently returned from a tour of the British Isles, was speaking. She said: "In Great Britain every little town has its wax works show. It is a mystery to me why we Americans with our far-famed business sagacity have so long neglected so fertile a field. They are as common and as cheap there as moving picture shows are here. In these places all the famous characters of history and literature are depicted. A school child is able to go into a wax works show and get an accurate idea of the costumes, faces and figures of any particular time. How many of us can get such an idea from a pile of clothing lying ticketed on a museum shelf?" "Mrs. Tussaud's wax works in London are probably the most complete of its kind in the world. Thousands of figures and scenes are depicted in so close imitation of life that one really lives history over again there."

MOST PATIENT OF THIEVES

In San Francisco a Man Was Discovered Stealing the Parts of Roller Skates.

Out at the Coliseum skating rink there has been discovered evidence of one of the most patient and hopeful thieves in America. A day or two ago he undertook to steal a pair of roller skates, but the evidence of his work was discovered and he remains in possession of three wheels, a bolt or two and a couple of pieces of metal that can be of no earthly use without the remaining sections of the skates, which remain in possession of the management. To compensate for the loss the Coliseum stands in possession of one felt hat, with the name of the dealer cut out of the band and a gap where the owner's initials were carried. To evade the regulations of the rink the optimistic crook was obliged to carry an extra hat or cap and a set of tools which enabled him to take the skates apart. The unpunished portions were discovered by a special policeman in an unfrequented corner of the pavilion. San Francisco Bulletin.

That Wooling Ham.

Ham, it has always seemed to us, varied more than any other articles over which blessings are mumbled in degree to palatableness, fragrance and invitation. The variation is due to the manner of approach. If a person is off his appetite, ham does the best when served as an Arizona breakfast—something else for the man and the ham for the dog. But supposing you have been hunting, rising early and staying late. You have lost your lunch. You have to trudge home over a hard road. You pass a farmhouse, and from its open door there comes the sound of sizzling ham and the heaven's breath of its perfume. It matters not if that ham sprang from a razorback hog in the wilds of Arkansas, you recognize that that ham is the most glorious flavor that grows, the world's desire, the tender touch of Eden, the plant of fire by night, the sweet influence of the Pleiades and the deliverance from envy, hatred and malice and all uncharitableness. For the next three miles you can't say a word to your companion because of a watering mouth.

Napoleon on Shakespeare.

It is a fact that the great emperor of the French had a very poor opinion of Shakespeare's plays. According to Thibaudon, in his "Bonaparte and the Consulate," Napoleon, said one day: "Shakespeare was forgotten even by the English for two hundred years, until Voltaire took it into his head to write him up, to please his English friends; and ever since people have gone about repeating that Shakespeare was the greatest author that ever lived. I have read him, and there is nothing in him that approaches Corneille or Racine. His plays are not worth reading."

Her Hair Saved Her.

When the steamer Tagus rose after a dip into an enormous wave while she was on her way from Bermuda to New York, a bride, the only bride on board, was floating about the deck like a biscuit. The water was three feet deep and she might have been swept from the deck had not Mr. Krehler, a New Yorker, grabbed her by the hair and saved her. So frightened was the young woman that she was carried to her stateroom in hysterics, and for five hours she could not be convinced that the ship was not sinking.

More Favorable Ground.

When our son was a boy of four a family of children moved next to who were simply impertinible. Of course their doings were much commented on in our family, and many a time I talked about "those dreadful Smith children." One day I had occasion to correct my little son, talking to him seriously. He listened quietly for a while, and then he looked up at me and said with the most engaging air: "Don't let's talk about this, mamma! Let's talk about the Smith children."

CHIEF EVENT OF THE DAY

Passing of the Milk Train, Not Charge of Bull, Caused Young Farmer's Haste.

In rural New England the passing of a milk train is still a matter of public interest quite astonishing to visitors from the city. Last summer three ladies from Boston hired an abandoned farmhouse in northern New England, in a region devoted to dairying. One warm August day they walked through the rocky pastures to a farmhouse three miles distant in quest of a two weeks' supply of butter. On learning that they had come through the fields, the farmer's wife exclaimed: "Why, you can't be back that way alone! Our bulls are out there in the back lot, and only day before yesterday he freed my son-in-law on a stunt for two hours. I'll have him go home with you."

With some misgivings on the part of the women, the little procession backed under the guidance of the young farmer, the ladies carrying the butter. All went well till they had gone about a quarter of a mile, when the escort suddenly caused, excitedly: "Come on!" and started on a run toward higher ground. Thinking that they understood the occasion of his activity, they needed no urging to follow him. On and on they sped, throwing away their butter as an impediment to their speed. Finally, bathed in perspiration and gasping for breath, they sank exhausted on a rocky ledge whither their guide had hurried them. Standing just above, he waved his arm in a dramatic gesture toward the valley below, where a freight train could be seen crawling slowly out from between a cleft in the hills, and shouted: "There she goes—the milk train!"—Youth's Companion.

DIDN'T TRUST HIS LAWYER

Shrewd Client Paid Fee In Advance to Learn If He Had Reasonable Chance of Winning.

It was told at luncheon at the Lawyers' club the day before the Equitable building burned down. A group of legal luminaries were gathered about a table discussing the apparent impossibility of insuring the honesty of any man, and it was contended that there was no remedy for it save to pick out your man and trust him absolutely. No matter what safeguards you might hedge him about with, if he was dishonest he would contrive to cheat somehow. One of the lawyers told this story to emphasize his point.

A client went into a lawyer's office in Fulton street and said that he had a grievance with his neighbor and wanted to go to law. He stated all the circumstances of the case and counsel listened attentively. The case fully stated, the client asked: "Well, those are the facts. Do you think I'm in the right safe enough to win if I go to law with him?" "If the facts are as stated you certainly have got a case. If I were in your case I should begin suit," answered the lawyer. "And how much would your fee be for taking the case and pushing it clear through?" "Oh, I'll see it through for you for a hundred dollars." The shrewd client produced from an inside pocket a well worn wallet, from which he extracted a roll of bills and peeled off one hundred dollars. "There," said he, "that's yours. It's your fee. That's all you'd get if you tried the case. Now, without doing any work on it at all, just tell me, honestly, whether I've any chance of winning the case."

Kindly Scribe.

"The editor of the Weekly Plain Dealer is a charitable sort of feller," commented Farmer Hornbeck, in the midst of his perusal of the village newspaper, wherein he had encountered an example of the Uncol's peculiar perversity, says Puck. "In his article on the death of Lafa Daback, who, betwixt me and you, hadn't much to recommend him except that he wasn't quite as bad sometime as he was others, he says that 'the document was generally regarded as highly commendable.'"

"And I guess that's about as near as anybody could get to making an estimate of the departed without hurting his relatives' feelings."

Snake Had Lived on Eggs.

On his morning round for eggs recently, Michael Heiseman of Custice, O., reached into a hen's nest and touched an object that made him jump back quickly. A closer examination showed a big spotted snake coiled in the nest. Besting a hasty retreat, Heiseman secured a shotgun and on reaching the nest noticed that the snake had swallowed a china nest egg and was gradually working it down its throat. It was but the work of a moment to blow off the head of the reptile. Heiseman then recalled the fact that his egg supply had declined recently, and he thinks that the snake, with perhaps its mate, had been making forays on the roost for some time.

Trouble Forecast.

"My wife says women ought to vote," said Mr. Meekton. "Well, have you any objection?" "No. But there's going to be a terrible row if the women of our community get the vote and then try to vote for anybody except her."

Attention! SINGLE YOUNG LADIES

—Your chance to win a—

$45.00 Solid Oak Bedroom Set and Two $30 Gold Watches.

If you want a 14k Gold Watch, Elgin movements of a value not less than $30.00 and a handsome three-piece Solid Oak Bedroom Set of the value of $45.00, the Recorder will give you an opportunity to acquire them, and for the purpose of deciding who shall be the happy recipient of these handsome presents it will conduct a Popularity Contest under the following rules and regulations:

The county is divided into two sections, viz: Beginning on the Ohio river at the mouth of Gunpowder creek, thence with said creek to the forks thereof a short distance above the old Gus Weaver mill site; thence with the north prong of said creek to the Burlington and Florence pike at Limaburg; thence with said pike to the Covington and Lexington pike in the town of Florence; thence with the Covington and Lexington pike to the Boone and Kenton county line between Florence and Erlanger; and part of the county north of said line shall be known as Section No. 1, and that part of the county south of said line shall be known as Section No. 2.

1. The young lady contestant in Section No. 1 who shall receive the largest number of votes in this contest, will be awarded a Gold Watch.

2. The young lady contestant in Section No. 2 who shall receive the largest number of votes will be awarded a Gold watch.

3. The young lady, among all the contestants, in both sections who receives the largest number of votes will be awarded the Bedroom Set. Thus it is seen that some young lady will receive two handsome presents.

4. The votes for each contestant will be determined as follows: Each $1 on subscription sent in by her or her friends will count for her 1,000 votes, while each 50 cents on subscription will count her 500 votes.

5. A contestant or her friends can solicit subscriptions or renewals thereof anywhere they desire—her territory is unlimited.

6. Votes once counted and credited to a contestant will not be allowed transferred to another contestant.

7. No votes will be allowed on subscriptions nor renewals of subscriptions paid prior to this date—Feb. 29, 1912.

8. Positively no votes will be allowed unless the money for the subscription or the renewal accompanies the same.

9. Renewals nor subscriptions must not be received for a period that will extend beyond the year 1913.

10. Any person renewing his or her subscription or subscribing for the Recorder can indicate for what contestant the votes are to be counted.

11. The votes will be counted at noon on Wednesday of each week and the result published from week to week during the contest, which will close at midnight, July 3d, 1912.

12. Only money on subscription to the Recorder, will be considered in this contest.

13. Married ladies are not eligible to this contest, but in the event a contestant should marry during the progress of the contest she will not be disqualified by her marriage.

14. Any single white lady nominated by a reputable and responsible person is eligible to this contest.

Nominations are now in order.

Why He Was Late.

"What made you so late?" "I met Smithson." "Well, that is no reason why you should be an hour late getting home for supper." "But I asked him how he was feeling; and he insisted on telling me about his stomach trouble."

Printed copies of the Confederate Pension Bill have been mailed to every person who requested one. The application blanks are now in the hands of the printer and as soon as Capt. Stone receives them he will begin mailing them out.—Ex.

Local Happenings.

The finest day of the year to that date.

Did anyone put an April fool over on you last Monday?

H. L. Tanner, of Hopkinsville, was a caller at this office, Tuesday.

Of the local duck hunters Grover Snyder has the best score, having killed seven.

The remains of Mrs. G. G. Hughes were buried from the funeral home last Monday.

Just now there are no local indications of any less year results. Don't miss the goose opportunity, girls.

Are you going? Sure you are going to see the "Noose Juice" at Library Hall, Saturday night, April 20th, is the date.

Russell Smith and Irvin Rus were duck hunting on the river at Lanesville, one day last week, they bagged two ducks and a goose.

There was a pretty good sized crowd in town last Monday, considering the weather. The horse show was small, there being only four or five horses on exhibition.

For rheumatism you will find nothing better than Chamberlain's Liniment. Try it and see how quickly it gives relief. For sale by J. W. Berkshire and E. E. Kelly.

Willie Grant, from over on Gunpowder, was in town last Saturday, long enough to buy a story. His conveyance was propelled by two strapping digmules.

James Kirkpatrick, the local architect and builder, is busy on small jobs which he expects to have completed in time to undertake larger ones so soon as the weather will permit.

Farmers along lower Gunpowder creek are taking advantage of the back water and having feed for their livestock shipped in a considerable distance up the creek in small boats.

Get ready for the best garden you ever made; have the soil as rich as you can make it, and fertilize it as fine as possible. Good seed and thorough cultivation will do the rest.

Don't be surprised if you have an attack of rheumatism this spring. Just rub the affected part freely with Chamberlain's Liniment and it will soon disappear. Sold by J. W. Berkshire and E. E. Kelly.

J. W. Jordan, the well-known dentist of Hopkinsville, Ky., writes "I used to have terrible pains across my back but since taking Foley Kidney Pills I have had no pain. I gladly recommend Foley Kidney Pills. For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky."

Congressman A. B. Rouse will be at home some time this week, to look after his business interests. He has been a very busy man for several weeks interceding with Uncle Sam on behalf of several of his constituents from whom the Government is seeking to collect some big fines.

A good milk cow belonging to James Beeson, who lives out on the old Thomas Neal farm, died in the pasture one day last week. Mr. Beeson put a chain around the cow's neck and hitched a horse to it. The cow was pulled out of the mud but the next day she died.

Quite a large crowd attended the sale of James P. Ryle down in Gunpowder creek, last Saturday, and good prices were the rule. Hogs brought about seven cents a pound; pair of mules, $75; pair of horses, $40; corn, 85 to 95 cents a bushel. Don Williamson was the auctioneer.

Rev. Edgar Riley had some very fine corn hauled from the Henry county farm last week. He brought to this office an ear of white corn, which he is having tested by the Boone County High School, and it was a very handsome specimen, every particle of the cob being covered by the grain except a small space necessary to the connection with the stalk.

One of the best points in favor of Foley Kidney Pills is the comfort and relief they give to elderly people. Mrs. E. McGee, 301 East 5th St., Owensboro, Ky., is in her 78th year and says: "I heard of Foley Kidney Pills and began taking them, and they commenced to act at once, and today my kidney and bladder trouble is all gone." For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

The organization of the Burlington Christian church was perfected last Sunday, when, at the morning services, Dudley Blyth and Dr. F. L. Peddicord were ordained as deacons, and Prof. E. L. Dix and Edgar C. Riley, as Elders. Rev. Elliott, of Sulphur, State Evangelist, conducted the ordination ceremonies in the presence of a large congregation. The sermons preached by Evangelist Elliott while here were very much enjoyed by his congregations and his visit was very beneficial to the new church organization.

The State Board of Equalization is in session at Frankfort.

It seems almost impossible to get to the next session.

The April term of the Boone Circuit Court will begin next Monday.

Never were the farmers so badly lashed as on account of delayed spring work.

Bessie Taylor, of East Bend, was the guest of Rev. Edgar C. Riley, last Monday night.

Two or three persons in the Ballittville neighborhood contemplate buying autos this spring.

Chas. Birkle and his brother, Fred, have formed a partnership for conducting the blacksmith business in Burlington.

Rev. Allen Smith, several years pastor of Gunpowder Baptist church, has accepted a call to a church in Keshville, Indiana.

The flood in the lower Ohio is doing an immense amount of damage. Some of the towns along the river are submerged.

Get ready to attend the entertainment Saturday night April 20th, at Library Hall and see the "Noose Juice," a drama in four acts.

According to the farmers there will be a general clean up on corn, hay and oats before pasture will provide food for their animals, something that seldom occurs in this country.

Some few farmers, who have heavy blue grass sod to break, started their plows last week despite the unfavorable weather. They could not brook any further delay in that class of work.

A milk testing class has been organized by Prof. Dix at the Boone County High School. The apparatus for making tests is a standard machine, and the pupils who compose the class are very much interested in the work.

The fiscal court was in session yesterday, and several of the overseers of roads were on hand to make their settlements. Equines O'Neal and Tanner and several of the guardians of the public highways called in to see the Recorder makers.

You will look a good while before you find a better medicine for coughs and colds than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It not only gives relief—it cures. Try it when you have a cough or cold and you are certain to be pleased with the prompt cure which it will effect. For sale by J. W. Berkshire and E. E. Kelly.

All School Census Enumerators are requested to enroll the colored children on a separate piece of paper or blank except the trustees of Walton and Burlington, where colored people make their own enrollments. Be sure to make two copies of the Census Report and have them sworn to. Edgar C. Riley.

Mrs. J. E. Gaines entertained, last Friday night, with a party in honor of her two sons, Harold and Virgil. Quite a number of young people were present, and as is always the case when they assemble at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gaines, they had a most delightful time, and the beginning of a new day was near at hand when the guests departed for their homes.

W. S. Bailey, McCreary, Ky., is willing to verify his statement as given herewith. He says "my wife had a severe attack of grippe that terminated in bronchitis. She coughed as though she had consumption, could not sleep, and her medicine gave no relief. She was advised to try Foley's Honey and Tar compound and she continued using it until she had taken three bottles, which effected a permanent cure." For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

The Consolidated Telephone Co. has not been able to repair all the damage to its lines resulting from the heavy sleet of several weeks ago. Dirt roads have been in such a terrible condition that it is utterly impossible to get poles to points where they are needed to replace those destroyed by the storm. Supt. Crouch has been badly handicapped in the matter of making repairs to his lines, although he had the service fully restored in a few days after the system was paralyzed by the heavy sleet.

There will be services at the Christian church next Sunday morning and evening. Young and old are welcomed at these services. Congressman A. B. Rouse sent to the Recorder a sack of garden seeds for distribution. Call and get a supply. It may be you will need them some time.

Personal Mention.

Thomas Hensley and J. J. Duncan were business callers at this office last Saturday.

Boss Ackmyer, of Bullittville, was transacting business in Burlington, last Saturday afternoon. Timothy Westway and wife, of Covington, were guests of friends in Burlington, last Sunday and Monday.

Dr. L. H. Crisler and family, of Covington, were guests of his sister, Mrs. W. J. Rice, last Sunday and Monday.

Mrs. Peddicord was called to her home in Bracken county, last Saturday, on account of the illness of her mother.

Atty. O. M. Rogers and D. E. Castleman, of Erlanger, came over to Burlington on professional business last Saturday.

Miss Lallie Rice, of Idlewild, neighborhood, was the guest of Miss Laura Frances Kiddell, last Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Walton, of Petersburg, were visiting Mrs. Walton's father, O. G. Hughes, last Sunday and Monday.

Mrs. Drucilla Goodridge had as her guest several days the past week, her granddaughter, little Lillian Goodridge, of Erlanger.

Miss Edna Riley, of Bullittville, was the guest of her brother, Rev. Edgar C. Riley and family, last Saturday night and Sunday.

Mr. F. C. Button, of Versailles, State Supervisor of Schools, was a guest of Prof. and Mrs. Dix, one day last week. He will come to the county next fall to inspect the schools.

Walter Grubbs and Gary Carpenter, of Richmond, came over last Saturday to confer with Supt. Riley in regard to the new school. Since the Union Graded School district was established it has been hard to keep up a school in the Frestown district, but they learned from Superintendent Riley that the school law as amended by the last legislature is much more favorable to small districts than the old law was.

B. F. Norman, of Gunpowder neighborhood, was in Burlington, yesterday, and called at the Recorder's office. Mr. Norman is one of the Recorder's oldest and most liberal patrons, paying for three or four subscriptions annually. Mr. Norman is one of the old Confederates who did valiant service at the front, and has made a close study of the pension law passed by the last legislature. While it is not exactly what he would have it, yet he finds not so much fault with it as some. He would have pensioned all the old soldiers had he made the law.

An Item of Home Interest. Charles Gormley, 397 Maxwell St., Lexington, Ky., has lately been cured of kidney and bladder trouble. He says: "I heard of Foley Kidney Pills, and the good they were doing, and after taking them a few days the pain left my back, the tired feeling passed away, and I am glad to recommend them." For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

There will be services at the Christian church next Sunday morning and evening. Young and old are welcomed at these services.

FARM AND ROAD IMPROVEMENT

BIG STONE BOAT AND WAGON

Excellent and Convenient Arrangement of Montana Man for Clearing His Farm Land.

There are a good many stones on my farm, and it is often necessary in clearing the land to haul these stones a considerable distance, writes Geo. Parks of Montana in the Farm and Home. I have a large stone boat that is good for hauling stones a short distance, but it is rather clumsy and hard to get around when I take it from the buildings to the other side of the farm.

In order to save the dragging of this boat long distances I arranged my low-wheeled wagon so that I could put the stone boat on in place of the wagon box. This makes it convenient to transport the boat from one part of the farm to the other, and it also makes a good wagon for hauling stones long distances.

I am often required to load this boat alone, so I arranged a roller on the back bolster, so that when I lift the front end of the boat onto this it is easily pushed toward the front. This roller was made by setting a piece of gas pipe into two small pieces of 2x6. These pieces are represented in the drawing by a. The roller is set into these pieces in such a way that part of it projects up over the pieces a. By keeping the corners of this roller greased it works easily.

The boat may be kept in place after it is loaded by two small cleats shown at b in the drawing. Side boards, c, may be easily made for the stone boat, and this makes it possible to haul other material besides stone.

TONGS TO HOLD PLOWSHARE

Tools Required When Sharpening That Will Stick and at Same Time Be Light and Short.

When holding a plowshare for sharpening, some kind of tongs that will stick and at the same time be light and short so that one will have the weight of the share close to the hand are necessary. To get a good grip with ordinary tongs they must have long handles and then the smith must take hold out near the end. This places the weight of the share so far from the hand that it is difficult to manage, and then the share will slip and turn where it is not wanted, says a writer in the Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Benefits of Good Roads.

There is one side to the good road question which is a good thing and one which few farmers seem to think of and that is in the market side. Why does the price of farm butter and eggs climb skyward in the towns every spring? Because of the short supply. These things pile up in the homes of farmers because they cannot get them to town. Good roads would make an even market all the year around and would add very largely to farm profits.

Two Plowing a Benefit.

Plow the garden as early as possible, then replot at planting time. The extra stirring destroys injurious weeds, eggs and insects, and renders the soil more pliable and productive. Seeds of tomatoes and celery, cabbage and eggplant should be started in the house or in cold frames. Onion, reddish, lettuce and the harder seeds may be sown early in the open.

Improved Roads.

It is estimated that something in the neighborhood of $400,000,000 a year could be saved throughout the country by improving 20 per cent. of the roads in this country. The fine country roads to be found in most parts of Europe are the delight of American tourists.

Good Roads.

There are 2,000,000 miles of unimproved roads in this country, and it costs an average of about two cents per bushel more to haul wheat nine miles to a station than it does to ship the same bushel from New York to Liverpool, 3,200 miles away.

SUBSTANTIAL GATES ON FARM

No Excuse for Tolerating Barrier That Says and Has to Be Opened by Using Main Strength.

By A. J. WILK. Often when a man is tired with a day's work on the farm it seems the last straw to open a gate that sags on its hinges, drags over the ground and has to be carried by main strength.

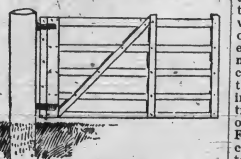

There is no need of having a gate of this description. It is very little trouble to make a gate that carries its own weight, moves easily, and never gets out of order.

Get a good post, at least ten inches square and eight feet long, and set in the ground three feet. At the very bottom of the post on the opposite side from the gate, place a large rock, and tamp the ground firmly around it and the post.

On the side that the gate is to hang on, put a flint rock about eight inches thick. This rock should be set in the ground four inches and tight against the post to keep the post from leaning.

Drill a three-quarter-inch hole one inch deep in the rock, four inches from the post. At the top of the post, set a half hoop of iron with a loop in front made of old wagon tire. Take a piece of hardwood three inches square and five feet long, and make the top round to fit in the iron loop at the top of the post.

Bore a hole from the bottom of this piece about three inches up and drive in an iron pin. This pin should be long enough to drive in firmly and reach about two inches below. Use this three-by-three with the iron pin for the back end of the gate.

The gate itself is made of five lengthwise pieces of one-by-four, twelve feet long, and five pieces of one-by-two, five feet long.

Nail a one-by-two at each side of the ends of the lengthwise pieces to form the front end of the gate and two more pieces to form the back end of the gate, and two more pieces the same way four feet from the front end, then one piece of one-by-two, four feet from the back end of the gate.

Now place the gate in position by putting the rounded end of the three-by-three through the loop in the iron spiked to the top of the post, and set the iron pin in the bottom of this three-by-three piece into the hole in the rock in front of the post.

Raise or lower the front end of the gate so that it will swing clear, and then nail a brace from the top of the three-by-three, cornerwise across the gate to the bottom of the front end.

The latch is a piece of three-fourths-by-three inches five feet long. Slip it in between the cross pieces at the front of the gate and resting on the top of the third lengthwise strip.

Fit it so it will slide easily and make a hole in the post in front of the gate for the latch to slip into.

Fertilizing Buckwheat.

In fertilizing buckwheat heavy applications of barnyard manure or other nitrogenous fertilizers should be avoided. Potash and lime are the elements most in demand by the plant and these can be best supplied in the form of unleached wood ashes. They should be applied at the time the seed is prepared, at the rate of 20 to 50 bushels per acre, depending on poorness of the land. Moderate amounts of well-rotted barnyard manure may be profitably applied on soils deficient in humus. Buckwheat does well after grass.

Good Roads & Farm Notes

Don't forget to brace the end post of any fence or trellis.

Seed grain of all kinds is scarce and high priced again this spring.

The three important elements of plant food are nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium.

Clover and grass seed will nearly always do best when they can be started to early growth.

There is no germ slayer better than an ounce of carbolic acid added to a pail of whitewash.

Teach the children to respect the dragon-fly. The friend of our kills flies and many other obnoxious insects.

Five or six of the twelve or thirteen species of beetles attacking stored grains are found usually in farmers' bins.

Farmers who know say that a hog fattened on milk and alfalfa brings just as much money when sold as a corn-fed porker.

To supply the demand it is estimated that the United States should grow from 340,000,000 to 350,000,000 bushels of potatoes annually.

It will pay to stop, sometimes, and get a realizing sense of the fact that our common birds are nearly all working hard for us during the whole season.

When it comes to growing pigs, calves, poultry or cream, any farmer with a few acres of alfalfa on his farm, has a great advantage over his neighbor without it.

PRIMARY LAW.

Both Parties Must Nominate Their Candidates at Same Time.

Following are the main features of the compulsory primary election law, which became effective with the approval of Gov. McCleary on March 18th. It does not apply to school trustees, nor to trustees of towns of fifth classes, nor presidential electors, but does include U. S. Senators, Primaries are to be held on the first Saturday of August of each year for the purpose of nominating candidates to be voted for at the ensuing November election. But nominations by political parties to fill vacancies at special elections to be held at some date other than the regular November election are to be made as determined by the governing authorities of the parties. The law also provides that, in the event of a party governing authority may also in this instance determine the manner of nominating. Such a nominee, if elected within seventy days of the election, his party may select the method of naming his successor. The law applies to those parties which at the last presidential election polled at least 20 per cent of the total vote cast and therefore effects only the Democratic and Republican parties.

Any person may become a candidate in the primary who files at least 30 days before the primary, the required nomination papers, signed by not less than three per cent of the total vote of his party in the district or county in which he is to run, except that in districts having more than one county such per cent of the voters in half the counties only is required, and in Railroad Commissioners' districts said per cent is required in only one fourth of the counties. For State offices, only two per cent of the voters of at least ten counties are required. Before his name is placed on the primary ballot candidate must sign an affidavit to the effect that he will qualify if elected at November election.

The County Clerk is required to publish the names of all the candidates not less than 20 days before the primary.

Both parties nominate their candidates at the same identical time and place, the same officers conducting both. The officers are to be divided the same as at regular elections, with respect to political affiliation, and are named by the county Board of Election Commissioners.

The voter must announce his party to the officers, whereupon the clerk issues him the ballot of his choice.

The returns are canvassed by the same board. The State bears all the expense, precisely as it does the regular elections.

THE FRUIT SITUATION.

Peaches, Raspberries and Blackberries are Practically

The fruit situation is a mixed one, according to H. F. Hillenmeyer, the noted horticulturalist and nurseryman. Mr. Hillenmeyer pronounced the peach crop as practically killed from the Tennessee line to Northern Ohio and west to Kansas. They may be scattering peach trees that will bear fruit from the fact of their being protected by windbreakers, but the hard frozes of February got in their work most effectively, said Mr. Hillenmeyer. Raspberries and blackberries—both cultivated and wild, suffered from the frosts of last summer, shedding their foliage in July and August and were so weak in vitality as to be unable to withstand the rigorous winter that followed. Mr. Hillenmeyer said the wild blackberry crop was the fruit crop of the great common people and he regretted the prospect was so unfavorable. But there will be plenty of fruit, said Mr. Hillenmeyer, as he spoke optimistically of the situation. Our great apple crop, he said, was the most promising for many years, cherries, pears and plums would be plentiful and grapes were unharmed. Strawberries, said Mr. Hillenmeyer, were untouched by the winter's frost, but had suffered greatly from the effects of the drought in that the number of young plants for the bearing season of 1912 were cut short. This feature of the crop said Mr. Hillenmeyer, would result in larger and finer fruit, which would also be a feature pleasing to the housewife.

TOBACCO NEWS.

James L. Wyatt, of route 5, raised $41.50 worth of tobacco on an acre of land last year. This is a splendid showing, and is proof abundant that the people should curtail their acreage and increase the quality as well as the yield.—Benton Tribune-Democrat.

A huge tobacco crop will be planted in the county within the next month, as the good prices are very alluring to the farmer. Everything to eat will be correspondingly high, as comparatively little corn, wheat, etc. will be put in, owing to the great rush in tobacco.—Richmond Register.

Some of the Missouri tobacco on the Mayville market sold at a good price while some of it was passed up without a single bid, the buyers claiming they could not use it in any way. Farmers in this section who intend to raise the weed should make a note of this fact and sow the right kind of seed.—Louisiana News.

The booming price of tobacco means the destruction of nearly all the little remaining tobacco timber in the county. With the passing of our native forests and with no railway connection with the outside world, it will require the price of a fair-sized farm to erect buildings thereon. And, then, there's fuel to be considered. When the timber is gone, the price of coal will double.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

The tobacco market this year has been a freak; it is not natural; it is not dependable. Tobacco sales have brought a goodly sum of money into the county, but this doesn't mean that you should plant your whole farm in tobacco next year. Just plant enough tobacco to help you pay for the things you need, and if prices are good next year and you don't ruin you if prices are poor. Above all things, give attention to your feed crops. Don't take the chance of having to buy corn at $1 per bushel and hay at $25 per ton next winter.—Ewing Inquirer.

The Hustler has received an interesting letter from G. E. Henry, cashier of the "Planters' bank of Montana Gap, containing data on a crop of tobacco raised on the farm of W. M. Henry near Sebree. The ground was carefully measured and the weights and price were taken from the receiver's statement. This crop of tobacco was grown on land that measured to contain 3.53 acres. The total weight was 8,130 pounds, 2,303 pounds and a fraction to the acre. The crop was docked twenty-five pounds and 100 pounds were set out for chewing tobacco, making the receiver's weights 8,065 pounds the price received was $635.75, an average of $109.10 to the acre.—Madisonville Hustler.

After the crops are planted, success in the vegetable garden depends chiefly upon thorough and frequent tillage. The tillage should begin as soon as the plants can be seen, and should be repeated at intervals of about one week throughout the season. Much labor will be saved by substituting a wheel hoe for the hand hoe for stirring the soil close about the plants while they are small, and by using a hoe for cultivating between the rows wherever there is sufficient space. If these methods are employed, the most troublesome weeds and tedious hand tillage will be largely eliminated.

"My little son had a very severe cold. I was recommended to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and before a small bottle was finished he was as well as ever," writes Mrs. H. S. Sikes, 23 Dowling Street, Sydney, Australia. This remedy is for sale by J. W. Berkshire and E. E. Kelly.

The Fine High Bred Percheron Stallion.

PRINCE OLSEN

Will make the season of 1912 at my farm two miles west of Walton, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a living colt. Persons parting with mares forfeit the insurance money. A lien retained on colt until season money is paid at weaning time.

PRINCE OLSEN was foaled in 1907, and is one model of his class. He weighs 1520 pounds and is nearly 17 hands in height. He is a beautiful black, and is a picture of symmetry and fine points of the draft horse. His breeding qualities are excellent.

PRINCE OLSEN was sired by Blackmon, a registered Percheron stallion owned by Ole G. Olsen, of Shabbona Grove, Illinois, where he was foaled in 1907, and from whom he was purchased by me last spring, selecting this horse over many others because of his excellent qualities. Prince Olsen is eligible to registry, and is one of the highest bred draft horses ever in this section of the country. The dam of Prince Olsen was a high bred registered Percheron mare. I feel that farmers and breeders will make no mistake in breeding to Prince Olsen, as it means a good, strong colt that will meet every requirement on the farm. One of the lacking features of our horses is the size and strength. With the well bred Percheron like Prince Olsen these essentials are fully incorporated.

Come and see the horse and inspect his good points and you will breed to him.

Also at the same place and under the same conditions I will offer for public service my two fine breeding jacks.

BEN
is a black Jack with meaty points, six years old, 16 1/2 hands high, large bone and big body, very long ear, and has proven himself to be one of the best breeders in Kentucky. His mules are quick sellers and several have been taken in the last season. His service fee will be $10.

DEWEY
is another fine Jack, four years old and a half brother to Ben. His fee will be $10.

Both Jacks are high in class, and are excellent breeders. Take a look at them before breeding. It may pay you.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents but I will not be responsible should any occur.

JOSEPH READNOUB,
Walton, Ky.

Harrison Prince

will make the present season at the stable of G. T. Gaines, one mile from Burlington on the Petersburg pike at $20 to insure a living colt.

HARRISON PRINCE is a chestnut stallion, 16 hands high, 4 years old, has a large blaze face, two white feet, and is the perfect type of a saddle horse with fine finish and action, a champion in his class from a colt. Harrison Prince comes from a family of show horses on both sides, and is a show horse himself, and should sire show horses. His sire is Dandy Jim, 2d, 1531, the well known show horse by McChieff, 1451, by Rex McDonald, 888, by Rex Denmark, 846, he by Cripp's Denmark by Old Denmark Chief.

His dam, Mary Neal, 1605, also a show mare, by Boyd Wilks, by Fayette Wilks; 2d dam, Skiddies, by Washington Denmark, Jr., by Washington Denmark 64.

Care will be taken to prevent accidents, but I will not be responsible should any occur.

In 1912 a premium of $20 will be given for the best and $10 for the second best colt of this year's get of Harrison Chief.

HIGH VINE,

Foaled in Spring of 1904
By Highland Gaines 1677.

Grand sire, Highland Denmark, 730; Dam, Beale Stable, 2882, by Shropshire Kentucky Squirrel, 1385; 2nd dam, Ida May by Fayette Denmark, 60; 3d dam, Maxey by Granger; 4th dam, Mare by Export, 77.

HIGH VINE is a five pointed Saddle Stallion, eight years old, 16 hands high, and weighs 1200 lbs. is a rich golden chestnut in color, and a perfect model in conformation. HIGH VINE is a uniform breeder and reproduces his own kind. The show record of his colts is unequalled by the colts of any size in this section of country. His colts have been shown at various fairs and have never been defeated in their class, and in addition awakened public admiration everywhere. In several instances the owners of High Vine colts have been offered $200 for the colts at weaning time, and this handsome price was refused by the said owners as all of them believed the colts to promise much better as they developed. There must be something in the breeding when $200 offers for weanling colts are rejected by owners who are governed by business principles in the sale of the products of their farm. Take a look at any of High Vine's colts and you will see the style and attractive qualities that make the price in a sale.

HIGH VINE will make the season at the stable of W. Lee Gaines on the Lexington pike, midway between Walton and Richmond, Boone County, Ky., at $20.00 to insure a live foal season money due if mare is parted with. No responsibility for accidents. Make engagements ahead as time is limited, and it is very annoying delays.

For the accommodation of those from a distance Mr. Gaines will pasture a few mares at $2.50 per month, with best facilities for their care.

PREMIUM—Free season for 1913 will be given the owner of the best High Vine colt exhibited at the Florence fair at the High Vine colt show.

W. LEE GAINES, Pres.
I will have on hand a car load of the celebrated Fish brand corn, tobacco and other crops. Place your orders with me early and receive a good discount. It will pay you to see me before purchasing elsewhere. L. T. CLORE, Burlington, Ky.

There are 100 children in the Home, which is located in Louisville, and there are only seventy-seven beds, so that some of the children have to be dreadfully crowded. "Then there's a man around at our house would like to fix things up with you," said the boy. "Can you come?"

Mentally rehearsing the crushing rebuke that he should deliver if requested to condone counterfeiting or kindred illegal practices, the patrolman accompanied his guide to the first-floor flat, where a very innocuous-looking young man, dressed in a newspaper, having satisfied himself that the officer would be on duty that night, the young man said:

"I shall sleep in this room, and if you should happen past here about 2 o'clock and hear me yelling my lungs out don't get scared and call the police. I'm a murdering man, but just reach in through the window and shake me good and hard. I shall be in the throes of nightmare, that's all, and as these folks are all strangers to me, maybe they wouldn't like to come in and wake me up. The night patrolman is the street I just want away from used to perform that little job for me, and I shall be much obliged if you will do the same."

The policeman seemed disinclined to assume the role of dispenser of nightmares, but he finally accepted the unique commission.

WERE NOT TO BE CONVINCED

Violin Maker's Work So Good the Critics Would Not Accept It as His Own.

While it is no easy matter for a violin maker to rival the famous Stradivarius instruments, an American maker once did this, and did it in so effectual a manner that experts pronounced his violin a genuine Stradivarius. The successful man was George Gemunder, who died some years ago. His remarkable ability as a maker of violins was known to many a distinguished player, such as Ole Bull, Remenyi and Wilhelm, but he achieved—no runs the story—his greatest success when he made an imitation Stradivarius, and to test its merits, had it placed on exhibition as the genuine article.

A committee of experts carefully examined the instrument and pronounced it a Stradivarius. So far Gemunder's work was complete, but no came a difficulty. When he claimed that it was not an old violin but a new one made by himself, the committee would not believe him. They declared that he had never made the instrument and pronounced him an impostor. He had done his work too well.

Plg or Coon Terrier.

William Haynes tells an amusing story of the Scottish terrier's appearance in the act of a dog. "I was at the university. The dramatic club was presenting one of Plino's farces, and I was lucky enough to be playing the part of a young scapegrace. In one of the acts, I used to take a Scottish terrier and when not before the footlights he mounted guard in my dressing room. Incidentally, she made things very uncomfortable for one of the ladies of the company who came, in my absence, to borrow a filling of tobacco for his pipe."

"One time I came back to my room to find it in an uproar. Two stage hands were plunged deep in discussion as to whether Betty was a dog, or a tame bear cub, a debate that was quite seriously complicated by a third person maintaining that she was a Scotch terrier. They had long since passed the retort courteous stage and were almost at blows, and I doubt that I could have convinced them, had she not spoken for herself—her bark being conclusive proof of her doghood."

No Place for a Washington.

Dr. R. J. Campbell, the English Christian-Socialist, was condemning, at a luncheon in Philadelphia, a certain type of modern business man. "This type of man," he said, "is precisely opposite to George Washington. Washington got on by telling the truth. This man gets on by lying."

"It reminds me of a story. A very successful business man took his son into his employ, and the youth, after a few days' work, entered his father's office and said disconsolately:

"Dad, I'm afraid I shan't make good here. You see, I'm not used to lying."

"But the father laughed easily. "Oh," he said, "if you tell the truth in a place like this, everybody'll believe you're lying, anyway."

Telephones and Ear Troubles.

The ear troubles of telephone users are attributed by Dr. Foster of Charleston to the sharp cracking and other intermittent distracting noises, and not to any electrical or electro-magnetic action. The elimination of these sounds is a problem for the telephone engineer. Herr Behr of Charleston has attempted a solution, and states improvement by substituting for the iron diaphragm one of wood attached to an iron disc.

AYRSHIRES GOOD DAIRY COWS

Almost Ideal Animal for Consumer on Account of Uniform Composition of Her Milk.

The Ayrshires are distinguished more as good average dairy cows than for heavy production either of milk or butterfat. In both these regards they occupy a position midway between Jerseys or Guernseys and Holsteins. An average herd of Ayrshires would probably produce more milk and butterfat than an average herd of either dairy breeds, but a selected herd of Ayrshires would fall much behind the production of a selected herd of the other breeds. For advanced registry, an Ayrshire cow must produce 6,000 pounds of milk and 114 pounds of butterfat in a two-year-old. The requirements gradually increase until the cow is five years old, when she must produce 8,600 pounds of milk and 522 pounds of butterfat. The milk tests somewhat less than 4 per cent. of butterfat and about 12 1/2 per cent. total solids. From the standpoint of the milk consumer, the Ayrshire is almost ideal, because of the uniform composition of the milk, but the heavy flow which many producers want for profitable production is lacking.

Twenty-four head of Ayrshire cows owned by different experiment stations in America produced an average of 6,834 pounds of milk per year and an average test of 3.85 per cent. of butterfat, or 253 pounds per year. The test of the milk 17 cows gave an average of 12.98 per cent. total solids. In this fact represented 29.6 per cent. of the total solids, as compared with 34.6 per cent. for the Jerseys and 28 per cent. for the Holsteins.

For veal production the Ayrshire ranks next to Holsteins. The calves weigh from 50 to 75 pounds at birth and are strong, vigorous and active. Doubtless no dairy breed produces as good beef as the Ayrshire. They fatten readily when dry and are said to dress out a good proportion of meat.

INCREASED YIELDS OF MILK

Pennsylvania State Experiment Station Makes Comparative Study of Soiling Crops.

The Pennsylvania state experiment station has made a comparative study of soiling crops for dairy cows. It was found that the chief influence upon quantity of milk produced during the experiments seemed to be closely related to the palatability of feeds. That is to say, those feeds eaten by the cows with the greatest relish, and consequently of which the largest quantity of green forage was consumed, generally gave the largest yields of milk. This seemed to be true regardless of the amount of dry matter or percentage of protein contained in the feed. Briefly, the milk produced bore a much closer relationship to total green forage than to dry matter or protein consumed. The effect upon quality of milk was shown only in an indirect manner. In no case was a flavor imparted sufficiently marked to be detected after the milk was aerated and cooled. The percentage of butterfat seemed to vary inversely as the live weight of the cows. In other words, those feeds which produced a gain in live weight seemed to produce a milk containing a lower per cent. of butterfat than was secreted when the cows were losing weight. This was true regardless of the quantity of milk produced. The indications are that some feeds tend to fatten the animals themselves, while others tend to produce fat in the milk.

DAIRY NOTES

Observe with care and note as a first point that the cow should have a large and ample-sized body. Cold rains are much harder on cows than dry cold. Damp cold penetrates to the bones. Provide dry shelter. Turn separator with a steady and uniform speed and flush down with skim milk or water at end of separation.

One man says the first year of milking is the poor time in which to make the foundation for a persistent milk.

In dairying there is no excuse for the man who goes at it blindly and blames luck and the weather for his failure.

Dairying is not necessarily a complicated line of work but at the same time it takes care in order to make a success.

It is quite customary among dairymen to quit feeding calves skim milk when they attain the age of eight to nine months.

If you don't believe in keeping cows comfortable visit the stables of the men who get large milk checks. That ought to convince you.

If the cream does not ripen rapidly as is often the case in the winter time the addition of a small amount of buttermilk will help the ripening process.

Mrs. Lizzie E. Conrad.

Mrs. Lizzie E. Conrad, wife of Mr. E. H. Conrad and second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hogan, passed away from her beautiful home, near Walton, Ky., on Monday morning March 11th.

It seems to me only a few short years since I taught a very interesting school in the Mt. Zion neighborhood, a class of lovely young girls sat around me there and I could see they appreciated all the teaching that I gave them, they were in the hey day of youth in the bright sunshine of this world's life, and I rejoiced in their happiness. Lizzie E. Hogan was one of the number; she was mild and gentle, "pleasant as the air of evening when it floats among the trees." She was remarkably impressive, and I think that she took in all that I gave her and assimilated it in such a way as to develop her mentally in many directions. She made rapid progress, greater in three months, than some would in six. Her girlhood was short, and I think it very happy, but we may say, she married the man of her choice in her early youth. They had trials in the beginning of their married life, they were unsettled, they had frequent changes and many circumstances pressed against them, and it was then that I saw a fiber of strength, of patience and endurance in Lizzie's character, that I had never observed before. At last they found a home in the shadow of a beautiful woodland, and within the sound of the railroad and the day and night. Then Lizzie, as a devoted wife, stood up, abreast with her husband, and what he accomplished in the field she did in the outside branches of her work, and in the management of her home affairs, until by their industry and energy, in a very short time, to the surprise of their friends, they rendered themselves independent of the world. One fine boy blessed hopes of the mother's heart were interwoven with his future. Mrs. Conrad had a religious education, she was brought up in a Lutheran family, and they certainly do try to train their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. All the Christians on the Rock of Salvation through Christ; there was no Lutheran church in Walton, but Lizzie found the Rock as strong in the Methodist church, as in the Lutheran, and there she went to worship and found Faith in Christ. The greatest trial of Lizzie Conrad's life was ill health, she was rarely well; and for many years she struggled with great physical sufferings, and at last, the Destroyer finished His work, and the soul of this lovely woman was freed from its earthly tabernacle. Oh, many we meet her on the banks of the Upper River, and in the company of the pure and best of earth.

Gerrly Claypool raised over $100 worth of tobacco last year on 1/2 acres of P. W. Wheeler's land adjoining the Baptist church lot, on Sardis pike.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

It is expected that a record-breaking crop of tobacco will be put in, due in a large measure to the good prices that have prevailed in the local loose-leaf markets this season.—Sheboygan News.

Planter G. L. Camp's tobacco crop last year averaged him over 1,100 pounds to the acre, an extra good average. Mr. Camp sold 20,000 pounds at a straight price of $10 per hundred.—Clinton Progress

Tobacco growers should not be induced by the high prices of the past season, to plant more tobacco than they can properly handle. Those crops that have brought the top prices have been handled in the best manner possible.—Fairmouth Pendletonian.

Mr. W. P. Kincaid, of Stanford, says the greatest crop of tobacco in the history of the country will be raised the coming year. He is a tobacco buyer and furnishes free seeds. This time he has given out more seeds than the total given out the past five years.—Danville Advocate.

Agnes Waddel, aged 13 years, of Millersburg, sold her crop of 130 pounds of tobacco on the loose-leaf market at Carlisle at an average of $20 per hundred, one basket bringing $87 per 100 pounds. She raised the tobacco herself in the turkey pens at Millersburg and shipped in a trunk to Carlisle.—Mt. Sterling Gazette.

Mr. R. L. Overstreet, of Perryville, who owns a good farm on the North Roiling Fork, sold the remainder of his crop of tobacco on this market last Tuesday at the goods average of 15 cents. Mr. Overstreet is one of the largest and most successful growers in the county, knows exactly how to handle his crop and invariably gets a good round price.—Danville Messenger.

We think the Burley Tobacco Society should at once proceed to distribute the money on hand from the sale of the 1909 pooled tobacco. It belongs to the men who worked for it and who hold the true all the tobacco is not sold but enough has been sold to make a distribution which would put a whole lot of money in circulation. Some of the boys are getting anxious to see some more of the money from it. They need it to buy dollar cars and $30 hats and some of them are getting a little tired of the top. —Elsburg, N. Y. Times-Democrat.

Milk is so nearly a universal food that it is easily entered into every household. It is the principal food of infants, and is the only food that milk is perfect food, and is therefore capable of supplying all the nutritive needs of the body. The milk that is a staple of the economical food is demonstrated by the comparison of the food values of milk and beef. A quart of milk at 8 cents is equivalent to a pound of beef at 18 cents. This means that 4 cents' worth of milk gives as much food energy in the body as 18 cents' worth of beef. Beef is the most expensive food in that it furnishes the least food value for the highest price. And for the same reason, it is the most expensive three or four times as much meat in a day as the milk and actually needs less food and for its highest physical condition.

If the American people would eat one-half less meat and consume one-half more milk, they would save one hundred and fifty millions of dollars in money, and in health enough to make the doctors' bills look small.

Food is better in its place than clean raw milk, and, on the other hand, none so objectionable as milk containing filth, teeming with bacteria and disease germs. It is not only a waste but is seriously dangerous to the consumer. The fact that milk is a perfect food renders it a luxurious medium for the growth of organisms, and it is a fitting environment for the bacteria of the Bismarck Station.

Wooden telegraph poles will soon be a thing of the past in New Zealand. In the future they will give place to the more durable poles made of ferroconcrete. Is the high cost of living responsible for the small number of marriages in this county? This question may be answered to the satisfaction of everybody unless it is answered both ways. But County Clerk Rogers is inclined to believe that the high cost really has something to do with it. High cost or no high cost, there are very few marriages in Boone county. During the winter there have been comparatively few licenses issued and no good reason is forth coming from those in a position to know something about it.

Boss Eddins subbed for Elmer Conley, carrier on R. D. 2 last week. The first trip Boss made was a corker, but he succeeded in delivering all his mail except that belonging to H. E. White, which he returned to the Burlington office, and asked: "Who is this party H. E. White? I could not find his box." When informed that H. E. White is his brother-in-law who resides out on the East Bend, Boss was ready to set up. "Why, said he, I talked to him out on the road and he said nothing about any mail." What threw Boss off the track is Mr. White's box has the name Hubert White instead of H. E. White on it and Boss knows him as Hubert.

Col. Graddy, of Petersburg, came up last Saturday to help instruct for Taft, and was very much elated with the unanimity with which the convention performed the work. By the way, the Colonel has recently had a system of lights installed for the streets in Petersburg. The Colonel thought that the progressive bean that Petersburg ought to have street lamps, when he proceeded to agitate the question in stores, on street corners and wherever he could get two or three persons together; and at the opportune time he sprang his subscription paper and in a few days the citizens had come across with the necessary money, and now the little hamlet boasts of being the best lighted town at night in this part of the State.

It seems that when Colonel Graddy sees that the town of Petersburg needs anything in the way of a public improvement the citizens back him in it and contribute liberally. On two or three other occasions he has sprung improvement propositions that the citizens put through for him without hesitating. He is thoroughly progressive and it is strange that he is in the last ranks instead of being an advocate of LaFollette or Roosevelt, but, nevertheless, it was a lucky day for Petersburg when he became a citizen thereof.

The Flying Mercury

hurled viciously across the silence. "Gee, you're a slow bunch of workers! Where's Lestrangle?"

The tumult that broke loose swept all to confusion. And after all it was Lestrangle who was put in the surgeon's care, while Rupert rode back to the camp on the driver's seat of the ambulance.

"Tell Emily I'll come over to her as soon as I'm fit to look at," was the message Lestrangle gave Dick. "And when you go back to the factory, have your steering-knuckles strengthened."

Dick exceeded his commission by transmitting the speech entire; repeating the first part to Emily with all affectionate solicitude, and flinging the second cuttlingly at his uncle and Bailey.

"The doctors say he ought to be in bed, but he won't go," he concluded. "No, you can't see him until they get through patching him up at the hospital tent; they put every one out except Rupert. He hasn't a scratch, after having a ninety Mercury on top of him. You're to come over to our camp, Emily, and wait for Lestrangle. I suppose everybody had better come."

It was a curious and an elevating thing to see Dickie assume command of his family, but no one demurred. An official, recognizing in him Lestrangle's manager, cleared a way for the party through the noisy press of departing people and automobiles.

The sunset had long faded, night had settled over the motordrome and the electric lamps had been lit in the tents, before there came a stir and murmur in the Mercury camp.

"Don't skid, the ground's wet," cautioned a voice outside the door. "Steady!"

Emily started up, Dick sprang to open the canvas, and Lestrangle crossed the threshold. Lestrangle, colorless, his right arm in a sling, his left wound with linen from wrist to elbow, and bearing a heavy purple bruise above his temple, but with the brightest victory flashing above all weariness like a dancing flame.

"Sweetheart!" he laughed, as Emily ran to meet him, heedless of all things except that he stood within touch once more. "My dear, I told them not to frighten you. Why, Emily?"

For as he put his one available arm about her, she hid her wet eyes on his shoulder.

"I am so happy," she explained breathlessly. "It is only that."

"You should not have been here at all, my dear. But it is good to see you. Who brought you? Bailey?"

catching sight of the man behind Dick. "Good, I wanted some one to help me. Rupert and I have got to find a hotel and we're not very active."

Emily would have slipped away from the clasp, scarlet with returning recollection, but Lestrangle detained her to meet his shining eyes.

"The race is over," he reminded, for her ears alone. "I'm going to keep you, if you'll stay."

He turned to take a limping step, offering his hand cordially to the speechless Bailey, and faced for the first time the other man present.

"I Am So Happy."

Lestrangle all day; he did not lift the gauntlet.

"You are perfectly free," he conceded, "which gives you the opportunity of being generous."

"There is no other way. I have been wrong and I have no control over you; will you come home?"

"There was no other argument but that that could have succeeded, and the three who knew Lestrangle knew that could not fail."

"You want me because I am a French," David rebelled in the final protest. "You have a substitute."

"Perhaps I want you otherwise. And we will not speak in passion; there can be no substitute for you."

"French and French," murmured Dick coarsely. "We can run that factory, Lestrangle!"

"There's more than steering-knuckles needing your eye on them. And you love the place, Mr. David," said Bailey from his corner.

From one to the other David's glance went, to rest on Emily's delicate, earnest face in its setting of yellow-bronze curls. Full and straight her dark eyes answered his, the contented Emily's answer to his pride and old resentment and new reluctance to yield his liberty.

"After all, you were born a French," she reminded, her soft accents just audible. "If that is your word?"

Very slowly David turned to his father.

"I never learned to do things by halves," he said. "If you want me, sir—"

And Ethan French understood, and first offered his hand.

Rupert was discovered asleep in a hammock outside the tent, a few minutes later, when Dick went in search of him.

"The limousine's waiting," his awaker informed him. "You don't feel bad, do you?"

"The mechanician rose cautiously, wincing."

"Well, if every joint in my chassis wasn't sore, I'd feel better," he admitted grimly. "But I'm still running. What did you kiss me awake for, when I need my sleep?"

"Did you suppose we could get Lestrangle home without you, Jack Rupert?"

"I ain't supposing you could. I'm ready."

The Best Selling Book in America

It is a story that stands out head and shoulders above the average modern story because of its mystery, villainy, love, adventure, humor, pathos and dramatic thrills.

READ IT You'll Find There Is No Lack of Excitement in This Story

A Mother's Care. A careful mother will not give her child a medicine without knowing it is pure, contains no opiates, and has healing and curative qualities. Such a medicine is Foley's Honey and Tar Compound for croup, whooping cough, bronchitis, and all affections of the throat, chest, and lungs. Best and safest for children and grown persons. Take no substitute. For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

DELICATE CHILDREN

Made Strong by Vinol

"I wish I could induce every mother who has a delicate, sickly child, to try our delicious cod liver oil tonic, Vinol."

"It restored our little daughter to health and strength after everything else had failed. It tastes so good she loved to take it—a bit of cod liver oil taste—Mrs. C. W. Stump, Canton, Ohio."

The reason Vinol is so successful in building up puny, delicate children, is because it is a combination of the two most world-famed tonics—the medicinal body-building elements of cod liver oil, aided by the blood-making and strength-creating properties of tonic iron.

If we can induce you to try a bottle of Vinol as a body-builder and strength-creator for your child, and you do not find it all we claim, we will return your money on demand.

The Public Road Problem.

In Grant as well as in many other counties, the public road problem has become acute. The following from last week's issue of the Grant County News, shows a bad State of affairs in our neighboring county as regards roads. He says: "The greatest problem which confronts our Fiscal Court, and the one which concerns the greatest number of our people, is how to maintain our county roads or rather how to keep them from retrograding. With a fund of considerably less than $50,000 per annum to spend in the maintenance of the turnpikes, which have cost the taxpayers a sum aggregating three quarters of a million dollars, and with more than five hundred miles of turnpike roads to keep up, the seriousness of the problem may be easily realized. Now, it is estimated that there are only 500 miles of turnpikes in the county. There are more than that, and that the free turnpikes, funded at $100,000 per annum, and it is less than that, only $40,000 per annum per mile, can be used for the upkeep of the roads. It is a wonder that our roads are continually growing worse instead of better? Is there anybody who believes that $40 per mile can be so expended as to keep these roads in good condition?"

"The highway which needs the most attention at the present time is the main thoroughfare known as the Lexington pike, which bisects the county from north to south, and is about 24 miles in length. More people travel on this road than any of the others and its condition is incomparably worse than any of the others. The 12 miles running from Williamstown to the Kenton county line is in a deplorable condition. Great holes have been cut through by heavy wagons and in places the road is almost impassable. The 12 miles from Williamstown to Corbin is not much better. At least five hundred dollars per mile would be required to put this road in first-class condition and make it what it should be, and it is doubtful if even that sum would do it. Should this sum be devoted to the improvement of this one road this year, very little would remain for the other roads in the county, which, in a better condition than the Lexington pike, are still in need of repair work. If one hundred dollars per mile could be spent this year on each of the branch roads and five hundred per mile on this main thoroughfare, then all of the roads could be put in good condition and a much smaller sum would be required for their maintenance in the future. We might even presume that the $200,000 fund available for this purpose would do it. In order to do this a sum aggregating $80,000 would be required, and there does not seem to be any means available for obtaining that sum. "Public property which has cost the citizens of this county approximately $150,000 is going to wreck because we do not have a sufficient sum to keep it in repair. "Less than 10 per cent of the original cost of this property would put it in good repair. What are we going to do about it?"

Timber and Tobacco.

The scarcity of timber in some parts of Western Kentucky is causing farmers to utilize corn cobs for burning tobacco beds. In Owensboro the grain elevators are finding a ready market for their output of cobs, the farmers hauling them to the country for use in preparing for the coming tobacco crop.

Some of the farmers in Kentucky are entirely without timber, and in others the remaining wood land is so small that the supply must needs be husbanded. A paper in Northeastern Kentucky commented recently on the fact that the few remaining forests in that particular region were being cut down in order to make room for larger crops of tobacco. There has been much talk of conservation in recent years, but there has not been much practical effort in that direction here in Kentucky. The farmers are still transforming forests into tobacco patches and when the timber is gone they will have cobs or other material wherewith to burn the beds for nurturing the embryo crops of the future.

It would be wise for all farmers to save some of their woodland. Timber is constantly required on the farm for various purposes and if the farmer grows his own timber he can materially reduce the cost of building fences, enlarging houses, repairing barns and other necessary work which involves the use of lumber in greater or smaller quantities.

One of the best points in favor of Foley Kidney Pills is the comfort and relief they give to elderly people. Mrs. R. D. McGee, 301 East 5th St., Owensboro, Ky., is in her 78th year and says: "I heard of Foley Kidney Pills and began taking them, and they commenced to act at once, and today my kidney and bladder trouble is all gone." For sale at Jones' Drug Store, Walton, Ky.

In conversation with the venerable R. C. Busse of Aurora who was in this city Monday he remarked to the writer that only once within his knowledge had he had a longer or more severe winter. In April of 1858, said Mr. Busse when plowing for corn sink holes and other protected places were still filled with remnants of the winter snow. Lawrenceburg Register.

FUSSY MAN MAKES PROTEST

Almost Unhappy Trunk of Men Makes No Sort of Appeal to Him.

"Of course it is generally understood that we can always run the other fellow's business better than he can," said the fussy Philadelphia man, "which is all the more reason for surprise that our advice is so seldom regarded. I could tell the haberdasher, for instance, what sort of salesman he should have behind his counters."

"I have never yet met one of these fellows who could resist the temptation to tell me what I should wear. And that isn't the worst of it. They tell me I should wear certain things because they do, not realizing that that's the very reason why I should not wear them."

"I rather pride myself upon the aloofness of my attire, and to have one of these young whippersnappers say, 'Here is the collar for you; I wear those myself,' as though that would influence me favorably, certainly does not get on my nerves. And they do it. It seems to be a sort of a challenge to my taste, and I am sure that I am as good as an ass in their favor."

"If I wanted to look like a $15-a-week counter-jumper I might imitate their taste and follow their advice. But I don't."

DOGS BECOME A NUISANCE

Station Island Made a Dumping Ground by its Big Neighbor, New York City.

Station Island, N. Y., is notorious as a refuge for stray dogs. The borough across the bay is overrun with homeless curs of all sizes, ages and descriptions, and the policemen are kept busy shooting them up to appease the fears of the nervous inhabitants. "Most of them come across on the boats," explained a cop stationed at the ferry house at St. George. "No, they aren't stayaways, neither do they work their passage over. They are brought over by people who don't want them, who have grown tired of their pets, or want to get rid of them for some reason, and instead of taking them to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals they bring them over here and turn them loose, knowing they will never find their way back."

"Once here they have to forage for their food and become wild and dangerous. Often they form in packs like wolves, and then they realize the strength of numbers, and are absolutely fearless. I dare say there are more dogs on Station Island than in all the rest of the boroughs put together."

Trying It On the Girl. "Oh, it's the grand job I've got now," said a burly Irish girl to her companion in the subway. "My principal duty is to sit in the parlor twirling my thumbs and listening to my lady play the piano. It seems her man likes music, but she gets so fussed every time she plays in front of people that she is after having a crying spell every time. So one day she says to me, 'Mary, I wish you to leave your work and come in and listen to me practice. I want to get used to playing in front of folks.' I dried my hands and slicked back my hair and went to the parlor and there I sit, the piano listening to my lady play the piano and if the work is behind she never says a word. Next week she says she is going to ask in the parlor so as to make more of a crowd and I have a secret hope that she's going to ask my gentleman friend to join us some evening when the boss is out and he is calling on me. It's the finest job I've had in my seven years' experience in America."

Soil Enough. Vincent Astor, at a luncheon in New York, praised the neatness of the American man's dress.

"In the past, I have been told," he said, "the American was careless—a little careless as to shaking, polishing his boots, and brushing his clothes. But he is now as neat as his English brother, who is acknowledged to be the neatest man on earth. "Apropos of the unbrushed clothes of the past, there was an actor of the old school type who appeared one morning on the Rialto with a red rose in his dingy coat. "Where do you suppose I got this?" he asked another actor, lifting his lapel proudly. "Oh, dear knows! the other answered, determined to escape a snarl. "Dear knows—unless it grew there."

New Breakfast Food

Respectable Man of Chicago recently stopped to inspect some street construction work in the Windy City. His attention seemed to be particularly drawn to a large iron cylinder that was being constantly turned over a fire for the purpose of heating grain.

"What do you make of that, Mann?" asked a friend who chanced along just then. "I think they must be rolled pebbles," answered Mr. Mann. "Some new kind of breakfast food adapted for those Italian immigrants."

An Easier Job. "An easy job will suit me, senator."

"How about winding the clocks every week?"

"I might make that do. But what's the matter with my tearing the leaves off the calendar every month?"

CHAPTER I

The boy at the barony.

The prodigal had not prepared for the barren lands of the pine woods where he had emigrated to escape the malaria of the low coast, but was no longer mattered for the last of his name and race, old General Hazard, was now at the great house where he had made his last stand against age and poverty, where he had given the struggle in their midst.

Though he had lived continuously at the barony for almost a quarter of a century, there was none among his people who could say he had day, as he said that this equine face in Mr. Hazard's time. Yet they had known of him, for the gossip of the barony, who had been his only friends for years he had chosen to deny to other friends, had gone far wide over the country.

Had not a man of business, Jonathan Crenshaw, was elected in the barony with a stranger to whom he gave the name of Bladen, and he had him to be the legal representative of certain remote connections of the old general's.

Jonathan Crenshaw sat before the flat-topped desk with several accounts before him. Bladen stood by his side.

"Suppose you will buy in the property when it comes up for sale," the man was saying.

Bladen nodded.

"I lived entirely alone, saw no one," he said.

"Understand," said Bladen, "you have with you two or three old hands, sir. He wouldn't even know."

There was a brief pause, then Crenshaw spoke again. "I reckon, sir, I know anything about the old general's private affairs you don't feel like to speak on, that point?" he asked.

"I know it," said Jonathan Crenshaw. "Fifty years ago, he married a woman who he called, 'Bladen,' and she was one child, a daughter; she had a South Carolina in her name, of Turberville, a great folks, and what became of the daughter, married Turberville?"

"Oh, years ago," said Crenshaw. "They were interrupted by a knock at the door."

"Come in," said Crenshaw. The man opened and a small boy entered the room dragging after him a long stick. Suddenly overcome by a shyness, he paused on the threshold with his head down, wondering eyes at the man with him. "Well, sonny, what do you want?" asked Mr. Crenshaw in a friendly way.

"Mr. Crenshaw, sir, I want this here old stick," said the child.

"I reckon you may keep it—at least no objection," Crenshaw glanced at the boy.

"Oh, by all means," said the latter, with a gleam of delight about the small mouth. With a murmur that was meant to be heard by the man in the room, he backed from the door. Bladen glanced in after him.

"You want to know about him, sir?" asked Jonathan Crenshaw. "That's the boy who Hannibal Wayne Hazard, Bladen's son, and a minute, sir—and quit with him. Mr. Crenshaw hurried from the room to return almost immediately with a tall countryman, wearing a blue coat, this is Bob Yancy. Bob, near the gentleman wants to hear about the old man and the child; that's your year?"

"Goodby, sir," said Mr. Yancy. "He took up to meditate on the mental A. K. as that was required of him. He was four years ago come next Christmas," said Crenshaw.

"Old Christmas," corrected Mr. Yancy. "The evening before, it was, and he went to Fayetteville to get my old horse. Just at sundown I heard up that bill mule of mine to come and started for home. A mile or so I heard some one else shouting and waited, and then I made up my mind to go. She spoke when I was along the way, and says, 'Come on, drive me on to the barony.' I got down to help her into the carriage. Well, sir, she hardly spoke a word to the red gate, when she said, 'Show, if you please; I'll be on the way.' The last of her was 'hurry' and she was riding the child in the carriage."

Back up the narrative, Crenshaw came as he was told. "She stayed here, and she told me."

out of my sight. His name is Hannibal Wayne Hazard. That is all the general ever said on the matter."

The old general was borne across what had once been the west lawn to his resting-place in the neglected acre where the dead and gone of his race lay, and the record of the family was complete, as far as any man knew.

Then Crenshaw, assisted by Bob Yancy, proceeded to secure the great house against intrusion.

"They passed from room to room securing doors and windows, and at last stepped out upon the back porch. 'Hello!' said Yancy, pointing.

"There on a bench by the kitchen door was Hannibal Wayne Hazard asleep, with his old spottin' rifle across his knees."

"Well, I declare to goodness!" said Crenshaw.

"I reckon you'd rather drop a word with yo' missus before you toted him home?" suggested Yancy, who knew something of the nature of his friend's domestic troubles.

"A woman ought to be home in her own house," said Crenshaw.

"Feelin' the truth of that, I've never married, Mr. John. But I was going to say, what's to hinder me from totin' that boy to my home?"

"If you'll take the boy, Bob, you shan't lose by it."

Yancy rested a big knotted hand on the boy's shoulder.

"Come, wake up, sonny!" The child roused with a start and stared into the strange bearded face that was bent toward him. "It's yo' Uncle Bob," continued Yancy in a wheedling tone. "Here, give us the spottin' rifle to tote!"

Yancy balanced the rifle on his great palm and his eyes assumed a speculative cast.

"I wonder what's to hinder us from loading this old gun, and firing this old gun, and hearing this old gun go—bang! bang!"

The child's blue eyes grew wide.

"Please, Uncle Bob, make it go bang!"

"You come along, then," and Mr. Yancy moved off in the direction of his mule, the child following.

The latter beguiling speech flowed steadily from Mr. Yancy's bearded lips.

easy, Bob; they ain't going to want him."

"Well, sir, that surely is a parcel of comfort to me. I find I got all the instincts of a father without having had none of the instincts of a husband."

A richer, deeper realization of his joy came to Yancy when he had turned his back on Balsam's Cross Roads and set out for home through the fragrant silence of the pine woods.

Just beyond the barony, which was midway between Balsam's and the Hill, down the long stretch of sandy road he saw two mounted figures, then as they drew nearer he caught the flutter of skirts and recognized one of the horsewomen. It was Mrs. Ferris, wife of the barony's new owner. She reined in her horse abreast of his cart.

"Good-morning, Mr. Yancy," she asked.

"I am Mrs. Ferris, and I am very pleased to make your acquaintance."

"The same here," murmured Yancy with winning civility.

Mrs. Ferris's companion leaned forward, her face averted, and stroked her horse's neck with gloved hand.

"This is my friend, Miss Betty Malroy."

"Glad to know you, ma'am," said Yancy.

Miss Malroy faced him, smiling. She was quite radiant with youth and beauty.

"We are just returning from Scratch Hill," said Mrs. Ferris.

"And the dear little boy we met is your nephew, is he not, Mr. Yancy?"

"It was Betty Malroy, who spoke."

"In a manner he is and in a manner he ain't," explained Yancy, somewhat enigmatically.

"Do you know the old deserted cabin by the big pine—the Blount place?" asked Mrs. Ferris.

"Yes, ma'am, I know it."

"I am going to have Sunday school there for the children; they shan't be neglected any longer if I can help it. Now won't you let your little nephew come?"

"I reckon you-all can count on my nephew," Bob said.

Hannibal and Yancy were the first to arrive at the deserted cabin in the old field Sunday afternoon. Six children from the pine woods, big brothers with little sisters and big sisters with little brothers, drifted out of the encircling forest.

Mrs. Ferris's missionary spirit manifested itself agreeably enough on the whole. She read certain chapters from the Bible, finishing with the story of David, a narrative that made a deep impression upon Yancy, comfortably seated in the doorway.

"You will all be here next Sunday, won't you?—and at the same hour!" she said, rising.

There was a sudden clatter of hoofs beyond the door. A man, well dressed and well mounted had ridden into the yard. As Mrs. Ferris came from the cabin he swung himself out of the saddle and, hat in hand, approached her.

"I am hunting a place called the barony; can you tell me if I am on the right road?" he asked. He was a man in the early thirties, graceful and powerful of build, with a handsome face.

"It is my husband you wish to see? I am Mrs. Ferris."

"Then General Hazard is dead?"

His tone was one of surprise.

"His death occurred over a year ago, and my husband now owns the barony," was the answer of the woman.

lips, in the midst of which relations were established between the mule and cart, and the boy quitted the barony for a new world.

The afternoon sun warmed as they went deeper and deeper into the pine woods, but at last they came to their journey's end, a widely scattered settlement on a hill above a branch.

"This," said Mr. Yancy, "are Scratch Hill, sonny. Why Scratch Hill? Some say it's the fleas; others again hold it's the eternal bother of making a living here, but whether fleas or living you scratch for both."

CHAPTER II.

Captain Murrell Asks Questions.

In the deep peace that rested like a benediction on the pine-clad slopes of Scratch Hill the boy Hannibal followed at Yancy's heels as that gentleman pursued the not arduous rounds of temperate industry which made up his daily life, for if Yancy were not completely idle he was responsible for a counterfeited presentment of idleness having most of the merits of the real article.

The barony had been offered for sale and bought in by Crenshaw for eleven thousand dollars, this being the amount of his claim. Some six months later he sold the plantation for fifteen thousand dollars to Nathaniel Ferris, of Currington county.

"There's money in the old place, Bob, at that figure," Crenshaw told Yancy.

"Bladen's got an answer from them boys Carolina Quinners, and they say they know nothing about the barony," said Yancy.

"No, madam; he was my father's friend, but I had hoped to meet him. His manner was adroit and plausible. 'Will you ride on with us to the barony and meet my husband, Mr. Yancy?' she paused.

"Murrell—Captain Murrell. Thank you; I should like to see the old place. I should highly value the privilege," then his eyes rested on Miss Malroy.

"Betty, let me present Captain Murrell."

The captain bowed, giving her a glance of bold admiration.

By this time the children had straggled off into the pine woods as silently as they had assembled; only Yancy and Hannibal remained. Mrs. Ferris turned to the former.

"If you will close the cabin door, Mr. Yancy, everything will be ready for next Sunday," she said, and moved toward the horses, followed by Murrell. Betty Malroy lingered for a moment at Hannibal's side.

"Good-by, little boy; you must ask your Uncle Bob to bring you up to the big house to see me," and stooping she kissed him. "Good-by, Mr. Yancy."

BRONCHITIS

To Whom It May Concern

Bluevale, Ont., May 4, 1910—"I was sick for two years with chronic bronchitis and a consequent run-down condition. I received no benefit from doctors or from a trip which I took for my health, and I had to give up work. Vinol was recommended, and from the second bottle I commenced to improve. I gained in weight and strength, my bronchial trouble disappeared, and I am at work again.

It is the combined action of the curative elements of the cods' livers, aided by the blood-making and strength-creating properties of tonic iron contained in Vinol which makes it so successful in curing bronchitis. Vinol is a constitutional remedy for chronic coughs, colds, bronchitis and pulmonary troubles—not a palliative like cough syrups.

Try Vinol. If you don't think it helps you, we will return your money. Robt. W. Jones, Druggist, Walton, Ky.

A Mooted Question.

The mooted question, whether the Burley Tobacco Society or the Board of Burley Tobacco of each county has the right to sell pooled crops of tobacco will be determined soon by the Court of Appeals. When the April term of the Appellate Court began Judge E. C. O'Rear, leading counsel for the Burley Tobacco Society, asked that the case of the Burley Tobacco Society, &c., against Monroe & Co., from Pendleton county, be advanced.

The case is very important to the growers of Kentucky and the other counties of the Burley tobacco pool. The construction of the validity of the charter of the Burley Tobacco Society, and the pooling contract of 1908 of the Burley Tobacco Society will be determined in this case. Judge O'Rear urged speedy action by the Court, saying that there are thousands of hogheads of burley tobacco that are involved in the suit, and the owners of the tobacco are waiting for the Court's decision to sell or rehandle the tobacco. Some of this tobacco has gone through two "swests" and to keep it for another year it must be rehandled.

A High Compliment.

It does not often fall to the lot of an outgoing official of an administration to become so popular and generally well liked with the members of the incoming one, that on the occasion of his leaving a farewell dinner is given to express the complaints of the new officials that he is too good a fellow to be on the wrong side. But such was the case with Mr. Charles Parrish, the Corporation Clerk in the Auditor's Office, under the Republican Administration, who has been with the Democratic force since the New Year, and who left the office the first of the month. The present force in the Auditor's office and several outside friends gave a dinner at the Frankfort Hotel to express their regrets at his going—and the following besides the guest of honor enjoyed a sumptuous dinner: Messrs. H. Z. Churchill, Joseph Embury, W. C. Elliott, Chas. V. Lee Evans, R. D. Dunstall, C. F. Saunders, Elmore Gaines, Henry Coleman, Don Todd, John Rice, R. J. Walker and C. A. Webster.—Frankfort Journal.

CARROLL COUNTY.

(Carrollton News.)
The loose leaf markets of Carrollton will hold their last tobacco sales of the season on Saturday, April 20.

Every farmer now has his tobacco beds sown, and indications are for an unusually large acreage.

A comparatively small crowd, perhaps 1500 people, attended court day sales here Monday, owing to the high water and the fact that farmers were busy burning tobacco beds. Not much stock was on sale.

The deep-well pump which has been used since the installation of Carrollton's water works system in 1895, is to be displayed by a late design of pump capable of furnishing one million gallons of water each 24 hours under a head of 315 feet. The new pump will be compound condensing, and working at a speed of 50 strokes per minute with 110 pounds steam pressure will amply supply Carrollton's demand at the present time.

The corporations thought Auditor Bosworth was only talking through his hat when he declared if he became Auditor of the State of Kentucky he would see that the tax values of corporations were materially increased, but he "showed them," and they are sending up a terrible howl because he is making good his promise. If the apprehension stands the test of the courts, the corporations will have to come across with an amount of taxes that will go a long way towards relieving Kentucky's financial straits.

Did you know a lighted match or taper would do wonders with the sewing machine? It is so. Light a candle or just a match and apply it to different parts of the wheels and cogs. Lint and thread will be on the chair, can be wiped off and the machine will run twice as easily. When a machine gums it is advisable to remove the head, place it in a tub and cover with gasoline. It makes a new machine from an old one.

A Vanceburg man has a sweet potato in a quart bottle. It is quite a curiosity and may open up a way to induce some people we have heard of to eat sweet potatoes. Enormous Profits.

The Standard Oil Co., which the Supreme Court of the United States dissolved some few weeks ago, has declared a dividend of 200 per cent. This action was taken by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and was made for the purpose of cancelling the enormous profits of the company. It was what is called a stock dividend; that is, for every share of stock owned by a stock holder, he was given 20 additional shares. To do this it was necessary to increase the capital stock of the concern from one million to thirty million dollars. No new capital was added however. The increase was declared out of the surplus.

TOBACCO FACTORY

At Louisville Said to Be Purchased by Burley Society.

The Louisville Courier Journal Sunday contained the following: "Strater Brothers' tobacco plant at Jackson and Caldwell streets has been purchased by the Burley Tobacco Society, according to Fred Stucky, Ghent, Ky., who next to Clarence Leach is recognized as one of the leaders in the organization of tobacco producers in Kentucky. In an interview over the long distance phone last night from his home, Stucky said he was in Louisville last Wednesday and at a meeting of those concerned in the transaction the deal was closed by verbal agreement with the understanding that the papers be signed later.

"The consideration involved in the sale of the property was not disclosed by Stucky, but it is understood that the figures were in excess of $500,000. Stucky added that the Burley Society probably would be in possession of the Louisville plant by May 1.

"Henry Strater, president of Strater Brothers' tobacco company, would neither affirm nor deny the report that the local plant had been sold. It is understood, besides the plant and real estate, the brands of tobacco manufactured by the Strater interests here for a number of years have been taken over by the Burley people.

"While a definite statement of the Burley Society's plans concerning the future of the plant is lacking, it is the understanding here and in Lexington, that for the time being the Louisville plant will be operated until the new main factory of the Burley Society is finished at Lexington. After that there is a possibility the local plant will be operated as a subsidiary to the Lexington plant, it is said.

"The Strater Brothers' tobacco company was organized in this city some twenty-two years ago. The officers are: Henry Strater, president; Chas. G. Strater, vice president; Harry A. Strater, secretary, and Chas. Helme Strater, treasurer. The concern made a specialty of a brand called "On the Square," the rights to which, it is understood, have been transferred to the Burley people. The plant afforded employment to about 85 people."

TOBACCO NEWS.

D. M. Curry has about completed the job of delivering the large crop of tobacco which was grown on the Hon. C. M. Clay's farm near Blue Lick Springs, consisting of 120,000 pounds. This tobacco was hauled to Mayville and sold over the loose leaf market and brought good prices.—Paris Kentuckian-Citizen.

As a tobacco grower Shum Graham, of the Greasy Creek country, has but few equals. From one acre he grew 1,775 lbs., for which he received $180. He had a large crop, but this one acre was more a test than anything else. This is perhaps the most valuable acre of tobacco ever before grown in Hopkins county.—Madisonville Husher.

Mr. W. H. Snapp, the famous one-sucker tobacco grower claims to have a snapper. He says that he is the only man in the State who can plant a tobacco seed one day and the next morning have the plants showing above ground and growing beautifully. He claims to have a preparation that does the work. Some of his neighbors, tried this plan and it worked to a queen's taste and they were delighted. This method would certainly greatly expedite the growing of the weed.—Harradburg Leader.

Geo. R. Bratton made the record round trip to Mayville with a wagon load of tobacco the past strenuous season. While nearly all others who have hauled tobacco to Mayville were compelled to wait from five to ten days before getting unloaded, Mr. Bratton made the trip in two days. He left here Monday morning early, March 25, got his tobacco unloaded, loaded up with twenty-seven bushels of coal and seven knock-down tobacco hogheads, and got back to Harrison county the next day.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

But Do You Always Get It?

Has it occurred to you that there is more deception in the making of furniture than anything else that is manufactured?

Do you know that attractive furniture is not always the best, and is not always the kind that gives the required service, but merely made so to lure the average eye and reap the unscrupulous dealer the biggest profit?

By all means, select what suits you, but insist upon the thoroughness of the manufacture of the article you buy.

According to the records of the weather bureau in Kentucky there were only five clear days in the month of March, and with one exception they came singly, being preceded and followed by rain and clouds. The amount of rain fell exceeded the rain in March, the monthly summary showing that there were 0.8 inches of snow and 8.7 inches of rain during March.

The tenant house on Legrand Gaines' farm near the second covered bridge on the Petersburg pike, was destroyed by fire one day last week. It is supposed a spark from the flue fell on the roof and started the fire. The house was occupied by Thomas Riddell, colored, who lost about all his household effects. The building was insured in the Boone County Company for $200.

Some people are annoyed because Gov. McCreary has not expressed a choice as between the several candidates for the Democratic nomination for the presidency, but had he done so he would now be accused of trying to swing the Kentucky delegation for his favorite. The Governor is acting wisely in refusing to take the State's affairs and letting the fight between the several candidates take care of itself.

F. J. Waldo, editor of the Rising Sun Recorder and the oldest editor both in matter of age and the time engaged in newspaper work in the part of the country, died last week at his home in Rising Sun. The Maysville base ball team of which Ray Conner and Ed. Sandford are members, defeated the Battle Creek, Michigan, team in the first game they played last week. Sandford pitched part of the game and showed good form. Conner played at short and of him the Maysville paper says:

(Prescott Journal-Miner.) A. W. Davis came yesterday from the property of the Fortune Mining Company and was wearing a broad smile. He proudly exhibited a small concentration of the best ore yet found in the property. The samples shown are a quartz gangue impregnated with sulphides and would be an ideal concentrating rock. A fair estimate of the value of the ore would not be far from $50 per ton, and Mr. Davis says that the better part of the vein will go into the shipping pile. This ore has been found at the 140-foot level, and Davis says that the better part of the vein is becoming, and Davis feels that a big success is now within the grasp of the Fortune, and that the company is going to live up to its name.

WOODEN TIRE

For Motor Cars is Cheap, Has Elasticity and Wears for Years.

A well-known inventor, Mr. John the builder of the first two-seated petrolcar made in England, has devised an ingenious substitute for the rubber tire, which should be particularly serviceable for commercial vehicles. He has selected wood for this purpose, owing to its remarkable elasticity, which is strikingly illustrated in the archer's bow, which retains its original elasticity for a half a century or more. Two years ago he evolved a tire made from ash, fitting it to an experimental wheel thirty-four inches in diameter, which, without the intervention of any carriage spring, easily carried a load of four or five hundredweight. He found this to run over road surfaces and obstacles quite easily and without suffering any damage. Then he fitted up a similar pair of wheels which were used as drivers on his six-horse power Darrack. This vehicle has been in use for several months, during which time it has covered hundreds of miles over roads of all descriptions with slight signs of wear; while as regards riding comfort and efficiency, the tire appears to be quite equal to solid rubber. The tire is built up of sections of ash bolted on the rim in two rows. If the vehicle is loaded the number of rows may be increased. The blocks of ash break joint with one another—i. e., the joint of one row is not placed over the joint of another row. In the ends of the blocks are piece cut away to give additional elasticity. Before the blocks are bolted on the wheel they are bent, to a somewhat greater curve than the circumference of the wheel by steaming. The blocks have steel cleats on them as a protection against being split on the road. If one block is damaged it can be replaced in a few minutes. If a block is struck with a hammer the rebound in the same way as if it hit a spring or a block of india rubber. The cost of these wood tires, which are shortly to be placed on the market, is estimated to be from one-sixth to one-fourth that of rubber tires, so that if the wooden tires last only half as long as the rubber ones they must represent a considerable economy. It is expected that these wooden tires will overcome the slipping, while they will go thru sand or over soft ground where a saw-cut, and a wedge-shaped rubber tire would be useless.

Should Be Grown At Home.

An upper Kentucky paper says that thousands of dollars are going out of its county every season for cabbage, potatoes and apples. The pertinent and proper question is asked, "Why not raise what we consume?"

Cabbage, potatoes and apples are articles of consumption which may be grown to a reasonable degree of perfection in Kentucky. Decidedly it would be much better to grow them at home than to buy them from our Northern neighbors at the increased price that is necessitated by the cost of handling, packing and shipping. In that way we should have more money in circulation in the State, and if, perchance we grow a surplus of these products they might profitably be exchanged for other people's money.

There are other vegetables and fruits which Kentuckians buy from abroad in preference to growing them at home. The outlay for these is enormous, and there would be no better way of saving money than by producing them in our fields and truck patches with the aid of our favoring soil and climate which always do a fair share of work in co-operation with the efforts of the farmer and fruit grower. Soil and climate cannot do all the work. If so we should have potatoes for the spring and apples for the plucking. One reason we do not have more of these commodities is because we are not keeping up our end of the enterprise and are not giving the soil and climate a chance to show what they can do when intelligently assisted.

In an agricultural county—and there are many such counties in Kentucky—there does not seem to be much excuse for sending away from home for cabbage, potatoes or apples. Yet there probably are few, if any, counties in Kentucky which raise a sufficiency of these articles for home consumption. Kentuckians should devote more attention to horticulture and truckgrowing or should invite immigration with an especial view to development in these lines.

Saves Leg Of Boy.

"It seemed that my 14-year old boy would have to lose his leg, on account of an ugly ulcer, caused by a bad bruise," wrote D. F. Howard, Aquone, N. C. "All remedies and doctors treatment failed till we tried Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and cured him with one box." Cures, burns, boils, skin eruptions, piles. 25c at all dealers.

Senator Bradley put his Taft program through the Republican State Convention at Louisville last week without a break, and among other things sat down on Judge E. C. O'Rear in a most ungracious manner.

A Disgrace to Kentucky.

We publish in another column of this issue an interview with Dr. E. M. Maggard, who is physician at the Penitentiary at Frankfort, which was first published in the Frankfort News. We hope all civilized Kentuckians, including public officials, will read this interview with care. We do not put that it states less than the truth.

The whole penal system of Kentucky is a disgrace to this State. The jails alone are enough to condemn the civilization of the State. Our first intimate knowledge of the interior of any jail came some sixteen years ago, when we spent two nights in one jail, and one night in another, for the purpose of protecting a prisoner from a mob that was reported to be formed for the purpose of hanging him. One of those jails, located in one of the counties in Kentucky, was a virtually nothing more than a den. There was no ventilation; it was indescribably filthy; no intelligent farmer would permit a hog to occupy such a place; no man who owned a horse or a cow would think of stabling it in one of the cells of that jail. The other jail was thought to be a credit to one of the four or five richest counties of the State. It cost many thousands of dollars. It was practically mob proof. There was every device for keeping the prisoners from escaping. There was no provision to conserve their health or to improve their minds or bodies. We took occasion to visit a number of jails in this State. Some we found a little better, but not very much, better than the two of which we gained knowledge during the nights we spent to help protect the prisoner from the threatened mob. Since then we have constantly urged a reformation of our whole penal system; the abolishment of our jails, which are breeding houses for crime, without justification for existence in any wise or humane penal system. But little improvement of conditions has been made. There has been some growth of public sentiment, and at one time we had real hope that under the leadership of Dr. Henderson and his equally able sister, Mrs. Leavering, who was a resident of Kentucky for a short while, there would be organized a definite movement for the reformation of the prison system. But Mrs. Leavering left Kentucky, and Dr. Henderson's interest was absorbed by his work at the University of Chicago, and the movement for definite relief from present conditions died of inanition. It is not possible that county officials of every county in Kentucky, or at least of the counties in the Blue Grass, can make themselves familiar with the conditions of the jails within their counties, and then find what ought to be done to make them places of reformation instead of degradation. So long is the list of offenses under the present system that we do not this morning even attempt to recapitulate them. Lack of ventilation, lack of space for necessary exercise; absence of any opportunity for privacy putting together of hardened criminals and those who are arrested for their first offense; women charged together; women and men herded together; are some of the grounds of indictment against the present penal system of the counties of the State. And ninety-nine percent of those who have never been in jails are utterly indifferent to these conditions because they are not of them.—Lexington Herald.

CAUSE FOR DELAY

In Distributing Money. Burley Society Issues Circular.

The Executive Committee of the Burley Society has issued a circular addressed to the members of the society and signed by president LeBus replying to inquiries as to why the officers of the society have not ordered another distribution of the money which has been received from the sales of the tobacco in the old pool. Upon this point the circular says:

"We have had many inquiries of late as to why we haven't made another distribution. There are two good reasons: First—owing to the suit now pending in the Court of Appeals from Pendleton county endeavoring to change the system of distribution, it would not be safe to make the same until this case has been passed on legally. Second—the two distributions of 20 per cent. each heretofore made were made on the 'ingrade' or what is better known as the 'outgrade' State grade or better grade. In some counties there is quite a difference, and we feel it would not be safe to pay or make any further distribution until we learn what is due each county."

We have about 8,000 hogheads of tobacco unsold and we have every reason to believe that we will be able to sell some at fairly good prices as soon as the new market opens.

The Rural Postman.

The Rural Postman day by day goes on his long, and toilsome way, and takes the farmer's mail he jogs across the hills and moors and much of hardships he endures for small supply of kale. I've seen him driving thru the rain, but never knew him to complain or read the riot act; he pushed his tired old nag along and greeted with a cheerful song the cold, wet catarract. I've seen him when the blizzard blew, I've seen him when the snowstorm snowed, but never heard him roar, serene he drives along the trail and leaves the farmer's green goods mall in tin box by the door. I've seen him when the roads were rough, and when the raw winds were enough to make a mummy cuss; he jolted over the ruts and stones that dislocated all his bones, and never raised a fuss. His wages make a paltry heap, and half of it must go to keep his wagon in repair; he manures his trusty bay and keeps its stomach full of hay, but he does not despair. I've seen no rural postman yet who made it his life work to fret and whine about his lot, when duty calls him to the road, without complaint he takes his load, a Johnny on the spot.—Walt M. son.

The Farmers' Best Friend.

The noblest creature on the farm is the work horse. The dairy cow is all right in her place, so too is the hog. Both are profit makers if well fed and cared for and a combination of the two is hard to beat. While this is true the horse is the animal on the farm we can not dispense with and he earns his keep and care by honest hard work. To keep him in good working condition at all times should be our aim. So far no motive power used on the farm can successfully compete with the horse or mule for that matter. Some motors can do one thing such as plow and harrow drill in the grain etc., but they are not yet as practical on the average farm. The horse is the only practical motive power for all kinds of farm work. This being true it is especially important that he be kept in the best possible condition for performing the various kinds of farm work. As a general rule the farm horse is fed a sufficient amount of hay and grain to perform his work and keep him in good condition but in many cases he does not receive the proper care and attention. The efficiency of the horse to a large extent depends upon the care he receives.

Slang.

The merits and demerits of slang are being earnestly debated by the faculties of the University of Kansas and the Chicago University. The learned men of Kansas contend that the use of slang by the students on the campus is deplorable, pernicious, hurtful, harmful, deleterious, detrimental, etc., etc. The Chicago professors take the other view. They hold that expressions that a few years ago were decidedly slangy have now become good English and will be found in the latest editions of the dictionary. The Chicago students have been advised to "go to it" and pay no attention to a "lot of moon-backs from a high grass town." They have been told to "get hep" to all the latest slang expressions "hanging around" and on no account to "cut it out" for thereby they are laying the foundation for a future command of the purest and most fluent English. It must be a great satisfaction to attend a university like the Chicago seat of learning, where the professors are baseball fans and admittedly "wise" to all diamond slang; where George Ade is held in esteem and where a dictionary takes precedence over Noah Webster's best effort.

The readers of the Recorder have noticed that during the past year the Covington merchants have been making special efforts to secure the trade of Boone county people. They have, besides offering special inducements to secure their trade, put the most reasonable prices on their goods, and these prices have been placed before the public week after week in these columns, and the merchants have been getting results that are very satisfactory. Covington is entitled to the Boone county trade and it is gratifying to know that she is coming into her own.

There's often much truth in the saying "her face is her fortune," but it's never advised when pimples, skin eruptions, blotches, or other blemishes disfigure it. Don DeGoze

The Belgian Draft Horse, foaled in 1903, will make the present season at E. J. Ayler's stable one and one-half miles from Hebron, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck, money due when colt comes to the mare is parted with or leaves the county. Don DeGoze, despite his great size and weight is well balanced throughout, perfectly proportioned and symmetrically built. He has a light action as a stallion of much smaller type, and his disposition is much better than is usually found in horses of blood strains. He is a beautiful dark sorrel, 17 hands high, weighs 1,700 pounds, has a broad, flat foot, heavy bone, fine style and action. This great breed of draft horses is especially known for better action than any other draft horse for heavy, good bone and good hoofs, and gentle, kind workers.

Don DeGoze's dam Della Wire, brown mare, the great draft show mare of Campbell County, Kentucky, sired by Bayard DeGoze No. 2188, whose Belgian Stud Book number is 21870, bred by Mr. Baillieux E. of Oze, sired by Morton (318), he by Brilliant (708), out of Coate (708), dam Catherine DeGoze (2108), she by Lion (786), out of Marie (948). Great care will be taken to prevent accidents but we will not be responsible should any occur.

The Imported German Coach Horse, Plutarch, 3183.

Will make the season of 1912 at my stable one mile west of Idlewild, Boone County, Kentucky, at $10.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck, money due when the colt is foaled or the mare is parted with. I will give a return season for the best colt, the 1911 get of this stallion, regardless of sex, to be shown at the Boone County Harvest Home this fall.

The Fine Black Jack, LANKY BOB.

Will make the season at my stable at $5.00 to insure a colt to stand up and suck. LANKY BOB is three years old, 15.3 hands high and a splendid individual. In handling the above stock care will be taken to prevent accidents, but I will not be responsible should any occur. Parties breeding to either of these animals must follow up the season. No business done on Sunday. Write for pedigrees and particulars.

BELL'S FITZSIMMONS, 2844 A. S. B. A.

Will make the season of 1912 at the W. L. Norman Stock Farm at Walton, Ky., and if you want a show horse breed to him. BELL'S FITZSIMMONS is a dark bay, 16 hands, weighs 1200 pounds, with three white feet, snip and star, and lots of style and action. He was sired by BRACKEN CHIEF 2148, by Harrison Chief 1908, by Clark Chief (80); dam Kilt Hat (222); by Indian Chief (1718); 1st dam Miss Berry 4084, by Roderick 104; by Hamprino Le Grande (99); 2d dam, by Wall's Yellow Jacket 112; 3d dam by Gray Eagle. Miss Berry is also the dam of Woodland Chief, one of the finest show horses in Kentucky. Woodland Chief is a full brother to Bell's Fitzsimmons and a full brother to Rhoderick, and one of the finest geldings ever showed, and sold to a party in Texas for $1,000.

BELL'S FITZSIMMONS is also the sire of the champion walk-trot gelding, Max Coyne, shown at the Horse Shows in the fall of 1908 and sold for $3,000, and also the champion harness mare shown by C. C. Harris. The greatest show, harness and saddle horses of our state have sprung from the loins of Harrison Chief and Indian Chief. Where can you find a horse of better breeding than Bell's Fitzsimmons? He has been a winning show horse ever since a suckling colt, and has proven himself a successful sire. Some of the highest priced saddle, harness and walk-trot horses that have left the State have been sired by him. Persons ever over all stock. Mares left on good pasture at 10c a day at owner's risk.

$15.00 to insure a mare in foal the mare will be bred to the best colt of the year's get of Harrison Chief.

JOHN RENSLEY, Walton, Ky.

The Fine High Bred Percheron Stallion.

PRINCE OLSEN

Will make the season of 1912 at my farm two miles west of Walton, Boone County, Ky., at $10.00 to insure a living colt. Persons parting with mares forfeit the insurance money. A lien retained on colt until season money is paid.

PRINCE OLSEN was foaled in 1907, and is one model of his class. He weighs 1620 pounds and is nearly 17 hands in height. He is a beautiful black, and is a picture of symmetry and fine points of the draft horse. His breeding qualities are excellent. PRINCE OLSEN was sired by Blackmon, a registered Percheron stallion owned by Ole O. Olsen, of Shabbona Grove, Illinois, where he was foaled in 1907, and from whom he was purchased by me last spring, because of his excellent qualities. Prince Olsen is eligible to registry, and is one of the highest bred draft horses ever in this section of the country. The dam, Prince Olsen, was a high bred registered Percheron mare. I feel that farmers and breeders will make no mistake in breeding to Prince Olsen as it means a good, strong colt that will meet every requirement on the farm. One of the lacking features of our horses is the size and strength. With the well bred Percheron like Prince Olsen these essentials are fully incorporated. Come and see the horse and inspect his good points and you will breed to him.

Also at the same place and under the same conditions I will offer for public service my fine breeding jack.

BEN

is a black Jack with neatly points, six years old, 15.3 hands high, large bone and big body, very long ear, and has proven himself to be one of the best breeders in Kentucky. His mules are quick sellers and several have been sold at $125 at weaning time. His service fee will be $10. Care will be taken to prevent accidents but I will not be responsible should any occur.

JOSEPH READNOUR, Walton, Ky.

Harrison Prince 3340.

will make the present season at the stable of G. T. Gaines, one mile from Burlington on the Petersburg pike at $20 to insure a living colt.

HARRISON PRINCE is a chestnut stallion, 16 hands high, 4 years old, has a large black face, white feet, and is the perfect type of a saddle horse with fine finish and action, a champion in his class from a colt. Harrison Prince comes from a family of show horses on both sides, and is a show horse himself, and should sire show horses. HIGH VINE, No. 2738.

Foaled in Spring, By Highland Gaines 1677.

Grand sire, Highland Denmark, 730 Dam, Beale Sable, 2882, by Shropshire Kentucky Squirrel, 1985; 2nd dam, Ida May by Fayette Denmark, 60; 3d dam, Mazy by Granger; 4th dam, Mare by Expert, 77.

HIGH VINE is a five gaited Saddle Stallion, eight years old, 16 hands high, and weighs 1200 lbs. is a rich golden chestnut in color, and a perfect model in conformation.

HIGH VINE is a uniform breeder and reproduces his own kind. The show record of his colts is unequalled by the colts of any sire in this section of country. His colts have been shown at various fairs and have never been defeated in their class, and in addition awakened public admiration everywhere. In several instances the owners of High Vine colts have been offered $200 for the colts at weaning time, and this handsome price was refused by the said owners. The colts are so well bred to the colts to promise much better as they developed. There must be something in the breeding when $300 of offers for weanling colts are rejected by owners who are governed by business principles in the sale of the products of their farm. Take a look at any of High Vine's colts and you will see the size and attractive qualities that make the price in a sale.

HIGH VINE will make the season at the stable of W. Lee Gaines on the Lexington pike midway between Walton and Richwood, Boone county, Ky., at $20.00 to insure a live foal season money due if mare is parted with. No responsibility for accidents. Make engagements ahead of his services are limited, and it save annoying delays.

For the accommodation of those from a distance Mr. Gaines will pasture a few mares at $2.50 per month, with best facilities for their care. The revival meeting at the Walton Methodist church closed Sunday night after a session of twenty-four days. There was only one accession; that by letter, but there was a genuine religious revival that accomplished a great deal of good in all religious circles.

The fact is realized that the Walton field has been so thoroughly cultivated that there are very few people who have not some religious identification, the fact is realized that there was very little opportunity to add greatly to the church membership.

The preaching was conducted by Rev. Andrew Johnson, the evangelist, of Wilmore, and the pastor Rev. H. C. Martin, of Brainerd, assisted, and conducted the musical program. The preaching was very fine and instructive, and all of the services were greatly enjoyed by the many who attended, the auditorium being crowded nightly.

On Monday night Rev. Johnson delivered his celebrated lecture on "Audience and Boozers" to a large audience. The lecture was along the lines of temperance and was a gem of thought and oratory.

Rev. Johnson left for Wilmore, Tuesday, and will then go to Columbus, Ohio, to take part in the tenth National Convention Young Men's Holliness League, May 2-5.
